Miscellaneous.

The Evils of a Hasty Temper.

"Please, sir," said Hannah, our chambermaid, speaking in a hesitating manner, as if the communication about to be made would produce a disagreeable impression.

"Well, Hannah, what is it?" returned uncle Abel, looking at her over the top of the morning paper, which had proved more attractive to him than the cup of coffee which he only tasted, and then left to cool on the table beside him. The expression of the good man's countenance showed that he was prepared for something disagreeable.

"Mr. Edward's girl is at the door, sir?"

"Well, what does Mr. Edward's girl want now?"

"The Edwards family were inveterate borrowers, and my uncle was beginning to lose all patience with them. 'She says, will you please—The chambermaid hesitated.

"Lend what? It's lend of course."

"The old man's face was crimsoning."

"I'll say you're using it," replied Hannah, in as soothing a tone as she could venture to assume.

"No, you needn't!" angrily replied my uncle. "I don't want you to put words into my mouth. Tell the girl to tell Mr. Edwards that if he wants to read the morning paper, he can subscribe for it as I do."

Hannah looked doubtingly at the excited old gentleman. She did not wish to be the bearer of such a message.

"Dye hear!" said uncle Abel in an imperative voice.

Hannah turned and left the room.

"Too bad! outrageous! The family is a nuisance!" ejaculated uncle Abel, in an unusually excited manner. "I'll stop taking the paper, if I am to be annoyed in this way. And he flattered the crackling sheet, as he threw his hands about him."

"I could with difficulty repress a smile, as I looked at the really kind-hearted old man, in his temporary excitement."

"Is it well to be angry?" I said, the moment I saw that I could speak to his reason.

"No, it is not well, Kate," he answered, in a subdued voice. "It is not well. And I am old enough to know better."

"That was a very rough message you sent to a neighbor."

"What did I say?" The old gentleman looked a little frightened.

"Why, you told Hannah to tell the girl to tell Mr. Edwards that if he wanted to read the morning paper, to subscribe for it, as you did."

Uncle Abel sighed, and looked down upon the floor, with a fixed angry gaze. His spirit was troubled.

"Mr. Edwards appears to be a very gentlemanly person," said I.

"Isn't gentlemanly to be forever annoying neighbors and coveting their property," retorted uncle Abel a little sharply.

He was making a feeble effort at self-justification. But it wouldn't answer. His own conscience was not satisfied.

"Perhaps," said I, Mr. Edwards's paper failed to reach him."

"I got mine," he answered.

"It's no use to argue the matter Kate, and try to place me in the wrong," said the old gentleman, warming up.

"There's nothing to justify his conduct."

Well, uncle Abel's breakfast was spoiled for that morning. He laid down the paper, tasted the cold coffee, and then pushed the cup away.

"Your coffee is cold," said I. "Let me pour out another cup."

"No, I don't want any more, he answered, getting up and leaving the table.

What a troublesome thing a quick temper is; and the more so, if it leads to hasty speech. Some of the best hearted people naturally are quick tempered. They suffer, of course, greatly from their infirmity, but never seem to gain much power over it. Of this class is my excellent uncle, to whose affectionate care I am indebted for a pleasant home.

I noticed that he did not leave the house quite as early as usual, and that, as he walked uneasily the parlor floor, he now and then bent listeningly an ear towards the street. In truth, he was waiting until he was certain Mr. Edwards had left home, so as to run no risk of meeting him.

My uncle was, in fact, heartily ashamed of his little outbreak of temper, and he felt that he must appear very badly in the eyes of his neighbor. It was not an unusual thing for them to meet during the day, and to pass a friendly greeting. How could my uncle look Mr. Edwards in the face, after what had happened? And, on the other hand, how would Mr. Edwards treat him, should their paths cross each other during the day?

"Poor old gentleman! He was sorely troubled in consequence of his hasty speech."

The day, as he feared, proved one of serious annoyance. Once he saw Mr. Edwards half a block in advance, and coming towards him. A friendly corner was at hand, and a short turn enabled him to escape from the unwelcome contact.

Again, on entering a store, he saw Mr. Edwards talking with the proprietor. The former did not observe him, and he quickly withdrew, feeling something like guilt in his heart.

Once he met Mr. Edwards face to face. The latter bowed with his usual politeness, as if nothing had happened; and this was to uncle Abel a most cutting rebuke. He would have felt better if Mr. Edwards had met him coldly, or with disdain.

The fourth and last time that he came in contact with his neighbor was late in the afternoon, when he was within a few paces of his own house. Mr. Edwards overtook him, and, offering his hand, remarked cheerfully on the state of the weather and the news of the day. As they were parting at our door, Mr. Edwards drew from his pocket a newspaper, and said, as he handed it to my uncle:

"I received a late copy of the London Times to-day. It contains an article on the United States, which I am sure will interest you."

"Thank you! thank you!" stammered Uncle Abel, pushing back the paper; "but don't let me deprive you of the pleasure of reading it."

"Time enough for me," replied Mr. Edwards, "time enough for me. I will enjoy it the more from knowing that its perusal has given pleasure. So take it, take it, and you can send it in any time. Good evening."

And Mr. Edwards passed on, leaving the Times with uncle Abel.

Now this was too pointed and my uncle felt it keenly. He came in looking hurt and depressed, and laid the paper quietly down.

I happened to be standing at the parlor window, and so heard what passed between the gentlemen. My uncle's state of mind was, therefore, no mystery to me.

"Pretty severely punished," thought I. "It was all in vain that I tried to win his thoughts from unpleasant reflections; he answered me only in monosyllables. Even his favorite airs on the piano failed to restore a cheerful shade to his spirits."

"Alas," thought I, "how much of suffering we draw down upon our hearts. These quick tempers and hasty words, how like the foxes, do they spoil our tender grapes!"

"Hannah," said I, as we sat at the tea table, "uncle Abel had spread the butter on both sides of his bread, played with his spoon, done, in fact, almost everything but eat his supper—what message did you send to Mr. Edwards this morning?"

Uncle Abel started.

Hannah grew crimson in the face, and stammered forth something that neither of us could understand.

"What was it, Hannah?" said I.

"I—I—I told the girl that if he would send Mr. Edwards the paper in a few minutes."

"You did?" said uncle Abel, in a tone of surprise.

"Ye-yes sir."

"And why did you say that?"

"Be-cause, sir, I thought that was what you would say on reflection."

"And did you send the paper in?"

"Yes, sir, when you were through with it, I hope I haven't done very wrong."

"No Hannah," said the dear old man, getting up, and assuming almost a respectful air towards the girl, "you did very right, and I thank you for your discretion."

Hannah relieved in heart, turned away, and glided from the room.

Uncle Abel was restored to himself—and I think what he suffered through that day, has helped him to a little self-control.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

Norfolk Agricultural Society.

The Annual meeting of the Norfolk Agricultural Society, for the ensuing year, was held at the Phoenix House in Dedham, on the 26th ult., the President, Hon. Marshall P. Wilder in the chair.

Dedham, March 26, 1856.

The undersigned respectfully report, that having examined the Treasurer's accounts for the past year, they find the same correct, and properly vouched.

Eden Wight, Charles B. Shaw, L. H. Kingsbury, Auditors of the Norfolk Agricultural Society.

Owing to the numerous exhibitions appointed to take place in this State, and throughout the country, on the same day selected for our annual exhibition, in which many of our members are interested, the time for holding the next Annual Exhibition of the Norfolk Society, was changed one week: viz, from September 23d and 24th, as notified in the handbills, to Tuesday, September 30th, and Wednesday, October 1st.

Hon. Benjamin V. French was unanimously re-chosen a Member of the State Board of Agriculture, for the term of three years from the first Wednesday of February last.

Voted, That the Thanks of the Society be tendered to Joseph L. Brigham, Esq., of Roxbury for his exertions in procuring and paying to the Society, the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, in order to increase the premiums and attractions of the annual exhibition of last year, in the horse department.

A premium of ten dollars was voted for the best song, to be composed by a member of the Society or one of his family, adapted to the occasion of an Agricultural festival, to be sung at the dinner table. A committee was appointed to award the premium, consisting of Messrs. E. L. Keyes of Dedham, A. J. Fisher of Dedham, and J. H. D. Blake of Braintree. Time expires, September first.

Voted, That hereafter all monies received or collected by the officers or agents of the Society in its behalf, shall be handed over as soon as may be, to the Treasurer, to whom shall be presented, after being duly approved, by the contracting parties, all bills against the Society, for payment.

A Committee to visit, at its discretion, as many towns in the county as may be thought expedient, during the months of June, July, August and September, for the purpose of examining farms, and the condition of Agriculture in general, and to report their observations for publication, was appointed, consisting of Rev. J. M. Merrick of Walpole, Rev. C. C. Sewall of Medfield, and Edward L. Keyes of Dedham.

On motion of A. D. Capen of Dorchester, a Committee consisting of the President and Secretary, and one member from each of the towns in the county, was appointed to nominate a list of Judges to award premiums at the next Annual Exhibition. The following constitute the Committee from the several towns:

Asa Pickering of Bellingham, B. V. French of Braintree, James Bartlett of Brookline, Elisha White of Canton, Abraham H. Tower of Cohasset, Eben Wight of Dedham, A. D. Capen of Dorchester, James Capen of Foxboro', Shadrach Atwood of Franklin, Charles C. Sewall of Medfield, Richard Richardson of Medway, Charles Breck of Milton, Benjamin G. Kimball of Needham, H. N. Glover of Quincy, R. W. Turner of Randolph, Joseph L. Brigham of Roxbury, Calvin Turner of Sharon, Luther Porter of Stoughton, Truman Clarke of Walpole, Aaron D. Weld of West Roxbury, James Jones of Weymouth, H. E. Clapp of Wrentham.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

The following gentlemen were chosen a Committee of Arrangements for the ensuing year:

John Gardner, Eben Wight, Henry Cormerais, Joseph W. Clarke, Francis Marsh.

Adjourned.

E. L. KEYES, Secretary.

We gather the above account of this interesting Society from the columns of the Dedham Gazette, the editor of which labors in this cause with a zeal worthy of much praise.

The Electric Eel.

Of the singular powers of this wonderful creature much has been written, and some things said, which appear almost incredible. This fish abounds in the rivers of North and South Carolina, and many of its wonderful exploits are recounted and recorded there. In the waters of Massachusetts Bay it is so seldom seen, the following circumstances seem worth relating, and are in the narrator's own words. Capt. Walker, of Provincetown, recently, while running a schooner from that place to Boston, was overtaken by night off Cohasset Rocks, and was running into Boston channel in the evening.

At about 8 o'clock, it being very dark, and his vessel moving very slowly in, he dropped over his lead to ascertain the depth of water, and on slowly pulling in his line he felt something cold upon it, and thinking it might be a bit of kelp or rockweed, was about to throw it off, when it fastened upon his hand and coiled around his wrist. He endeavored to shake off the eel when suddenly bringing its tail around, it struck his arm with considerable force, and giving the worthy Captain such a shock as sent him reeling to the deck. Recovering a little, he proceeded to seize the fish and cast it overboard, when he received a second shock from the little battery, caused him to call for aid, uttering a scream that must have been heard for miles.

Determined not to be overcome by so paltry an object as a small eel, he proceeded once more to discharge his celship, but was a third time repulsed and with greater force than before, laying him prostrate at full length upon deck. His men immediately rushed to the rescue, and bore the Captain almost senseless aft, where medical aid could be administered.

Never having heard of such wonderful power of the electrical eel, the greatest consternation prevailed, and the vessel rushing on in the thick darkness, they knew not where, the anchors were got out with much difficulty, and they waited impatiently the return of day, actually supposing some evil spirit had seized upon them, and that for the night they were to be the sport of their orgies.—Yarmouth Register.

Washington's

where it is said, there was no less than two hundred establishments at work in the early part of the fourteenth century. A Florentine dyer, having ascertained in the Levant a method of extracting a coloring principle from the lichens which furnish archil, introduced this on his return, and acquired by its sale an immense fortune. The ancients seem to have attained considerable proficiency in the art of producing colored patterns on cloths. Homer notices the linen cloths of Sidon as magnificent productions. In India, the art of imparting a tinged pattern to cotton fabrics has been practised with great success from a very remote epoch, and it derives its name of calico printing, from Calicut, a town in the province of Malabar, where it was formerly practised on an extensive scale. According to Herodotus, the inhabitants of Caucasus adorned their garments with representations of various animals, by means of the aqueous infusion of the leaves of a tree; and the hues thus obtained were said to be so persistent as to be incapable of being removed by washing.—Muspratt's Chemistry.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

IMPORTANT LAND SALE. The reader is referred to the Advertisement to be found in another column of our paper to-day, under the caption, of "Land at Public Auction." The property here offered is pleasantly situated in that part of our town, known as "Savil Place," centrally located, in close proximity to Churches, Schools, Stores, &c., and within a few minutes walk of the Old Colony Depot. To capitalists or those in want of pleasant and central sites for building, a rare opportunity is here offered.

FAST NIGHT CONCERT. See Advertisement. These Concerts have gained a celebrity in the musical world worthy of their unique and unrivalled performances. It is a happy idea of closing the solemnities of that day in this manner. Our citizens should not miss the opportunity of enjoying the rich treat here prepared for them.

TO ADVERTISERS. We owe an apology to some of our Advertising friends for the non-appearance of their favors to-day. The truth is, our advertising columns this week have received a run unparalleled in the annals of newspaper enterprise. Next week will put all things right. For our own convenience and the accommodation of our friends, we would here suggest the propriety of their handing in their favors at an earlier hour.

PURCHASERS OF CARPETING will find advertised in our paper of to-day, the scale of prices by the New England Carpet Company of Boston.

CLAN CHOWDER. Preparatory for the forth-coming "Fast." The Proprietor of the Granite Saloon, anticipating the wishes of our worthy Chief Magistrate, that the people should be in a condition to meet his requisitions on Thursday next, will regale his friends on this univalued preparation this afternoon and evening.

TIME'S CHANGES. The inventors of Steampower, Railroads, and machinery have during this century changed the means and courses of living, while the discoveries of science have done even more for the advancement of human happiness and the amelioration of human suffering. Our forefathers when they were sick, drank the bitter drugs that did not cure, and bowed them down under diseases that are now easily broken. They tried crude roots and herbs, which failed them. Now scientific research has discovered that this peculiar property of one root and that of an other was required. It is through this light and on this principle Dr. Ayer has compounded his two great remedies—Cherry Pectoral and Catarrhal Pills. He has concentrated the curative virtues of our best vegetable remedies. The result shows their origin and their results are known in community. Mark the difference to a patient in the elapse of fifty years. Then he swallowed his bitter pill in vain; now the sick man takes his sugar pill or honied drop and soon is well again. These adaptations of the sciences which bear upon the security or the comforts of human life are after all tangible points of their advantage to man. Without them it matters little how much may be discovered, or what we know since it is unavailable to our necessities and use.—Eastern Literary Review.

THE Vegetable Pulmonary Balsam has become the most popular medicine ever put forth, for the cure of coughs, colds and consumption. That it is worthy of its high reputation is made sufficiently evident by the immensity of its annual sales. Hamburg is so plentiful that it gives us real pleasure to offer this trifling and gratuitous tribute of our recommendation to a medicine we know to be of real merit.—Dr. Burlington Sentinel.

Reflections on Abolitionism.—"The Union, won and forever."—Passage of the Bill through its debatable stage to annex a portion of Braintree to Quincy—Congress—Italian opinion of Mr. Banks—Glance at European News.—A tribute of praise to the Boston Herald.

The anti-Slavery sentiment which, for twenty years past, has kept portions of our Republic in a state of effervescence, is to be the turning hinge of the incoming Presidential contest. It is conceded on all sides, that slavery is an evil. The North thus reasons, and the South yields the argument. Nay, more, the wish is not confined to the people of the non-Slave-holding States, that this evil, planted with the first settlement of our country, and suffered to luxuriate by the mistaken love of ease and gain, on the part of the European races, may peacefully and constitutionally be removed from our midst. Its memory blotted from our escutcheon. It is the mode upon which the American people differ, in the initiatory measures for the abolition of slavery, rather than the inclination. Twenty-five years of criminative and recrementary warfare, on Southern slavery, has produced that disunion spirit, whose lambent fires play around the hearts of millions; but are ready upon the first strong breeze of anti-Slavery excitement, to burst forth to all the direful consequences of anarchy and disunion. These nullifiers are found in every State of the Union. Is it too uncharitable to say, that political ambition; the love of office and worldly gain, rather than patriotism or philanthropy, are the true springs of action among the anti-Slavery leaders of the country. The sentiment, "No union with Slaveholders," is rank nullification. We are united with them by bonds closer than the hyemal tie. The Slaveholders are our brothers, with whom we should reason, but never quarrel on the stupendous question of negro emancipation, a consummation devoutly to be wished. The hearts of our Southern brethren are as noble and generous as any north of Mason and Dixon's Line; and if an appeal to humanity fails,—statistics, which are always stubborn facts, will show, that free labor and free institutions, will make Virginia like Ohio, and chivalric South Carolina like the growing state of Illinois. In a pecuniary interest, the valuation of the whole South, would become soon, an hundred-fold. Perhaps this is the real argument hominum of the case. The contest then on this momentous subject, should not be carried on by an appeal to the Rev. Dr. Beecher's muskets, or the sayings of William Lloyd Garrison, but by friendly and sober argument, to men, who are our countrymen, our brothers.

Since my last the General Court has passed a large number of Bills through their various stages. On Monday last after a short discussion, a Bill was passed to set off part of the town of Braintree and annex the same to Quincy. The vote was very close; sixty-eight yeas to sixty-six nays. Unless vigilance is used, notwithstanding it passed the debatable stage; it may be billed on its passage to be engrossed. Clevelea will probably be annexed to Boston the present session.

The absorbing topic at Washington continues to be the Kansas and Nicaraguan questions, in all their bearings. Much political capital will grow out of discussions on these subjects for the ensuing Presidential election. A passage at arms has come off in the United States Senate between Mr. Bell and Clayton, pending the consideration of the action of the Navy Board in reference to grade and retired lists. In the height of their passion the Senate wisely adjourned.

It is laughable to learn, how well the organization of the American Congress is known in some parts of Europe; for instance, the Il Monitor Tuscano, (in Italy) says of Speaker Banks, "The new President of the Congress of the United States, elected after two months daily balloting (Signor L. Banks), is a negro, belonging to the Republican representation of Massachusetts. As a man of color, and as an abolitionist, he does not enjoy the sympathy of the Southern Representatives."

The Collins Steamer Atlantic reached New York yesterday, from England, March 19. The news is important. It is said the Treaty of Peace between England, France, Sardinia and Russia was formally agreed to at Paris on the 12th of March. It awaits ratification merely, to be proclaimed. The benefits of European peace to our country are obvious to all. Business will again flow into its right pathways. And, although, the prices of the necessities of life must now come down; the agriculturist will not in the end be the loser. A son is born to the Emperor and Empress of France, which has given rise to much rejoicing in France and even England. This strengthens the dynasty of Louis Napoleon.

You will discover by the Boston Herald of Monday last, a change has taken place in its proprietorship. Mr. John M. Barnard having retired, the business concerns of the paper are to be conducted in future under the firm of Bailey & Co. The Herald is in truth "The paper for the People." Its daily circulation is by far, greater than any other penny paper in New England. No labors by night or day are ever spared to present its readers with the latest news at home and from abroad. The editorials, or "leaders," (as they are termed by printers) for many years past, in a literary point of view, have not only been well written, but their sentiments have been characterized by great independence; breathing the progressive spirit of the age. The industrial classes of our community have uniformly found an able champion of their rights in the columns of the Boston Herald. Success to its future labors in favor of equal rights to all.

Mr. Editor: Have you signed the "Pledge?"—we mean the "Temperance Pledge." This enquiry is made in good faith, (premising that you have not) to remind you of a duty, which all good citizens should be proud to emulate. A feeling is abroad in the community that the use of intoxicating liquors for sensual gratifications are fearfully on the increase. Our young people have formed a "Temperance Society," and taken the matter in hand with a zeal and earnestness deserving of all praise. We were waited upon a few days since, by one of their members, who pled like an angel of mercy the cause of the inebriate, and for our influence in wrestling with this foul scourge of the human race. Her picture of its deplorable effects upon the health, morals, and social condition of the people, were truly frightful. It caused us to blush for our lukewarmness in so meritorious an undertaking; and to groan in agony at the thought of how great a sin we have been. Our resolution however was formed at the time; that henceforward, to redeem past omissions, we would devote our best energies to the cause, and endeavor by precept and example to lure the thoughtless and inexperienced from the haunts of vice, to the more rational and pleasant scenes of sobriety and rectitude.

Habit, it is said, long indulged in, begets second natures.

How important then, for all, whatever there position in society may be, to guard with scrupulous care, every prompting of their nature, for indulgences which may mar their future life, and destroy those faculties, which if rightly developed make the perfect man.

POINT.
Mr. Speaker Banks
It is said is busily engaged preparing a defence of his course which secured him the Speakership of the House of Representatives. "This may be set down as 'The managers last kick.' What has rendered such a defence necessary at this time, or for whose special benefit it is intended, we are left entirely in the dark. Surely not for the people, en masse, for they care but little about it; neither can it be for the Democracy, as they understand the gentleman better than he appears to understand himself. His former friends in this quarter will not soon forget his faithless abandonment of their cause in the hour of need,—uniting himself with the vilest of factions to gratify his insatiable thirst for office; or of his travelling a neighboring state, in company with old Hartford Convention Federalists, hurling defiance at the Democratic party, and declaring his willingness to sacrifice even the Union itself to reach the goal of his ambition.

No! no! Mr. Prentice Banks—nothing you can now say or do will restore you to your former standing in the political world. You have "Sown to the wind, you must now reap the whirlwind." Your public career will be a short and ignominious one.

Francis P. Blair, since the Pittsburgh Convention, has left the party in disgust. He says the "North will not back him up in his Nullification predictions." All his grand schemes, therefore, are likely to prove a dead failure. He took an affectionate leave of his friends recently, at Silver Springs; declaring it as his intention to quit the political world forever. He is preparing for the ministry.

The Black Republican Party have come to the conclusion that it is not best to run a Presidential candidate on the "one idea," or purely sectional grounds. They are now in favor of putting up what they call a "Union candidate;" to dodge that issue, and leave the people in the dark as to their true principles.

SENATOR DOUGLASS in a speech recently delivered in the Senate of the United States, upon the Kansas question, applied a well-merited castigation upon the bare shoulders of a Mr. Trumbull, a Know-Nothing and Black Republican member of that body. The Hon. gentleman fairly winced under the operation, especially that part of it which made allusion to traitors and their probable end. He said he held in utter abhorrence any such method of shuffling off this mortal coil, that he desired nothing more when he entered the gates of Paradise, that it should be in a perfectly sound condition, not disjointed, with the brand of traitor stamped upon his brow; he begged, therefore, that no further reference would ever be made to the subject.

If the bare allusion to an event which is not unlikely to take place, should so effect the nervous system of the Hon. Member, we cannot conceive what his feelings would be when the application is in reality made.—For we can assure him, that as true as as there is a right and wrong, if that nest of vile traitors at Washington, with whom he is associated, should drive things to the extreme of shedding blood—only one drop of American blood, their leave of absence will be required without even the benefit of clergy.

The people have not been indifferent spectators of passing events; they know the authors of our present difficulties, and if an occasion should arise, are prepared to apply the remedy. We would therefore advise Mr. Trumbull, if he is desirous of having a peaceful exit from this world, and in a condition to pass an examination in the next, to use his influence to allay rather than provoke agitation upon a subject which only leads to discord, and sectional hatred.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 2d inst., William Brown Bugbee, M. D., son of the late Dr. Samuel Bugbee of Wrentham, (Mass.) aged 32 years and 11 months.

In this town, on the 21st ult., Carrie B., youngest child of Mr. George and Mrs. Augusta Curtis, aged 2 years, 10 months and 10 days.

Why in a thing of earth put trust,
Doomed to darken and disappear?
"Ashesto ashes, and dust to dust!"
This is the song we daily hear.
Love not idols fashioned of clay,
Though in our mortal visions fair;
They and food for the tooth of Decay!
Fainter than thistle-down floating in air.

When between a mother and child,
Yawns the dreary gulf of death,
Oh! the moan, how sad and wild,
Broken by the sobbing breath—
But why mourn, and mourn in vain,
When the young go up to God,
Safe from the strife of mortal pain—
Safe from affliction's heavy rod?

Look on the beaded drops of dawn,
How they melt in the gliding beam!
Upward by the Power withdrawn,
That imparts the dazzling gleam:
So with the innocent and pure,
Early marked with the sign of doom,
A passing season they endure,
Then fly a world of guilt and gloom.

I would not call the lost one back,
Sweet sister! though the power were mine,
To tread Life's dark and dreary track,
Where serpents with garlands intertwine.
Why in a thing of earth put trust,
Doomed to darken and disappear?
"Ashesto ashes, and dust to dust!"
This is the song we daily hear.

In Milton, on the 22d ult., Mrs. Julia A. Beals, aged 18 years and 6 months.

Enclosed within the grave, dear Julia sleeps:
Her once loved form now dwells with kindred dust.

While, for her much loved daughter, virtue weeps
And guards the mould'ring ashes of the just;
But her dear soul released from cumbrous clay,
On seraph's pinions borne, has taken flight
To the bright mansion of unclouded day,
To bloom forever in the realms of Light.

Yes! dear departed shade, our streaming eyes
Shall tell thy worth, and oft below thy tomb:
As from our bosoms burst the pensive sigh,
Our hearts with sorrow mourn thy early doom:
Thy gentle manners every heart endeared;
For slander could not hurt thy spotless form;
Pale envy dare not come when thou appearest,
And fell detraction blush to hear thy name.

Thy husband, Ah! his silent woe
Proclaims the sorrow, time can never heal;
Whist thou, where pleasures never cease to flow,
Know not the anguish he must feel.
Be still! and dare not grieve, I grieve the blow—
Submissive bow—a voice from Heaven replies:
Learn that substantial bliss dwells not below,
But blooms unfading in ethereal skies.

CARPETINGS
CHEAPER THAN EVER.

OUR SCALE OF PRICES
FOR SPRING SALES.

THE immense success in our sales, attending our fixed low prices each season heretofore, has induced us to offer, this spring, all sorts of Carpetings, including our new and fresh goods as well as the old stock, at a still lower rate than ever, making it an object for every one in want of a carpet to call on us, as it will be seen by the following schedule of prices, at which we shall retail our goods, they being below the usual wholesale prices, and to many cases for the first time of auction goods, below the cost of production.

17 CENTS per yard for HEMP CARPETS.
25 " " " LINEN CARPETS.
30 " " " INGRAIN CARPETS.
37 1/2 " " " UNION CARPETS.
45 " " " SUPER-UNION CARPETS.
50 " " " TWO-PLY CARPETS.
60 to 70 " " EXTRA FINE CARPETS.
75 to 85 " " SUPERFINE CARPETS.
80 to 90 " " KIDDEMINSTER CARPETS.
92 to 113 " " SUPERFINE ENGLISH CARPETS.

Three-Ply at very Low Rates.
80 to $1.25 per yard for BRUSSELS TAPES-TRY CARPETS. Comprising beautiful and modern styles of English and American manufacture.

$1.25 to $1.62 per yard for splendid VELVET TAPES-TRY CARPETS. The usual prices of which are $2.25 and upwards.

Also, many styles of high cost Tapestry and Velvet Carpetings of superior English manufacture, which, on account of their high rank and beautiful quality are seldom imported to this country, will be sold at the same prices of an ordinary article.

Also, a large stock of FLOOR OIL CLOTHS,
Embracing the largest assortment we ever had, from 24 feet wide to the narrowest width, at very low prices. Also, Canton Matting, Stair Carpets, Druggists, Felings, Rugs, Mats and all articles usually found in a first class Carpet Warehouse.

A great portion of our stock having been purchased at the recent auction trade sales in New York gives us superior advantages for supplying our customers at low rates.

Notice.

To all persons interested in a certain assignment made by the Norfolk County Railroad Company to Messrs. George B. Upton, Sewall Tappan, and Samuel Hooper, GREETINGS:

WHEREAS, the said Norfolk County Railroad Company, by an instrument in writing, duly executed by them, dated May 18, A. D., 1849, assign and set over certain property of said Corporation to George B. Upton, Sewall Tappan, and Samuel Hooper, in trust, out of the proceeds of said property, after discharging the expenses of said trust, to pay—

FIRST—All land damages which have been or shall be assessed for taking and land or materials for the said road.

SECOND—To pay all such sums as are due to operators for labor performed on said road, which the contractors with the said corporation shall consent to have so paid.

THIRD—To pay such creditors of the said company as should become parties to said instrument of assignment.

And whereas, the subscriber has been appointed Assessor by the Supreme Judicial Court for the County of Norfolk, in a certain suit in equity, brought by Robert G. Shaw and wife, against said assignees and the said company, for the purpose of ascertaining, and reporting to said Court, whether the said trusts under said assignment, have been fully discharged; and whether any and what sum may be still due thereon.

Now this is to give notice to all persons interested in any of the said trusts set forth in said assignment, to appear before me, the subscriber, at my office, in Brazier Building, 27 State street, in Boston, on SATURDAY, the nineteenth day of April, 1856, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, then and there to present, and make proof of any claim which they may have under the same.

Poetry.

Young Again.

An old man sits in a high-backed chair,
Before an open door.
While the sun of a summer's afternoon
Falls hot across the floor,
And the drowsy tick of the ancient clock
Has notched the hour of four.

A breeze blows in, a breeze blows out,
From the scented summer air,
And it flutters now on his wrinkled brow,
And now it lifts his hair,
And the leaden lids of his eyes droop down,
And he sleeps in his high-backed chair.

The old man sleeps, and the old man dreams,
His head droops on his breast,
His hands relax their feeble hold,
And falls to his lap in rest—
The old man sleeps, and in sleep he dreams,
And in dreams again is blest.

The years unroll their fearful scroll—
He is a child again;
A mother's tones are in his ear,
A drift across his brain;
He chases gaudy butterflies
Far down the rolling plain.

He plucks the wild rose in the woods,
And gathers eglantine,
And holds the golden buttercups
Beneath his sister's chin;
And angles in the meadow-brook
With a bent and naked pin.

He loiters down the grassy lane,
And by the running pool,
And a sigh escapes his parting lips
As he hears the bell for school;
And he wishes it never nine o'clock,
And the morning never fall.

A mother's hand pressed on his head,
A kiss is on his brow—
A summer breeze blows in at the door,
With a toss of a leafy bough,
And the boy is a white haired man again,
And his eyes are tear-filled now.

Rest.

Rest for the weary man
Whose sinews stout and strong,
Are worn by the iron band
Of poverty and wrong.
Rest for the brawny hand
Of muscle and of bone;
Rest for the toil-worn hand,
Where rest is seldom known.

Rest for the iron will,
That has struggled hard with fate,
And is fighting fiercely still
For success, to come too late!
Rest from exhausting strife,
Rest from the bitter scorn,
That would make misfortune's life
The life of a bondman born.

They say that a manly heart,
Should fight till the latest breath—
That never a strong should start,
Till the life-blood curls in death;
Go, batter the soul for gold,
And act the remorseless knave—
It were better to maim and sell,
Than become misfortune's slave!

There is no such work as fail!
And labor hath its need,
Is the rich man's mocking tale,
To his fellow-men in need.
Success is the mighty king,
To which the many kneel, While honest failures bring Contempt and a damning seal.

Does not the freeman lie
Crushed down by the tyrant's heel?
And the fallen patriot die,
Beneath the oppressor's steel?
Not alone on the weak and frail,
Do the storms of fate come down,
But the noblest heroes fall,
In misfortune's sullen frown.

My morning and evening prayer
Is for sleep that knows no waking,
Relief from this cheerless care,
When the heart shall cease from breaking.
O God! for one hour of rest,
Like that of my early years,
When rocked on my mother's breast,
She kissed away my tears.

Anecdotes.

*Husband, I hope you have no objection to my being weighed?

*Certainly not, my dear; but why do you ask the question?

*Only to ascertain, my love, if you would let me have my weight once?

*Sonny, can you tell me who was the most wicked man that ever lived?

*Yes, Moses.

*Moses! why how can you make that out?

*Cause he broke all the commandments at once?

The Rev. Daniel Isaac was both a great wag and a great snorer.

*Ah! there you are, cried a lady who surprised him one day with a pipe in his mouth, at your idol again?

*Yes, madam, replied he coolly, 'burning it.'

*Is it very sickly here? said a son of the Emerald Isle to another.

*Yes, replied his companion, 'a great many have died this year who never died before.'

A gentleman recently addressed a passionate letter to a lady, to which was added the following postscript:

*Please to send a speedy answer to this, as I have somebody else in my eye!

*How do you know, said an enlightened European to an ignorant savage of Asia, 'how do you know there is a God?'

*How do you know, replied the savage, pointing to human footprints near him, 'how do you know that men have passed this way?'

AYER'S
CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it to healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring parties.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of PILES, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—From one to four— to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, headache, and sourness of the stomach will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

FOR A POOR STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight Pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCORPULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purgative and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health.

Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all of any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because: 1st, system wants cleansing. 2nd, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they are as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhoea, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; diarrhoea, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is worthy of notice that such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these small kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DINNER PILLS, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Lighting the Match at Both Ends.

A slanderous report once travelled with telegraphic despatch, until it reached its victim's ears; who, being gifted with considerable energy, traced it back from one to another, until it stopped with an old woman. On being questioned, she acknowledged the soft impeachment, but could give no more satisfactory reason for her remark than 'she really believed she must have dreamt it'. The following, although not quite so precarious in its origin, has been handed about from one to another, until all that can be satisfactorily ascertained respecting the first narrator is that he is a man. I tell the tale as it was told me.

Many spare moments of my boyhood were spent in endeavoring to solve an enigma—that enigma was my uncle, Elihu Norton. Even now, through the lapse of years, distinctly rises up his spare finger, quick, bright eyes, and 'coat rather the worse for wear'—although I have never yet met with that implied curiosity, one that was better for it. He was known to be the possessor of enormous wealth; yet he chose to live in a plain, quiet-looking house, furnished in the most unpretending manner. Other people called him "queer"—I thought him stungy. He died, once upon a time, gave me a sixpence, at the conclusion of an afternoon visit, but the next time I went there, I looked for the expected douceur in vain. The tempting vision of that confectionary window, however, was too much for human flesh and blood to withstand, particularly, when clad, as in present instance, in a brown linen apron, and only the second or third pair of pants: so twirling my cap in my hand, I made a desperate effort, and modestly observed, 'Uncle Elihu, I spent that last sixpence you gave me for pea-nut candy.' 'And I suppose,' said he, without the vestige of a smile, 'that you would like to have another sixpence to spend in the same manner?'

I preserved a respectful silence, and my uncle, drawing forth a bright, new sixpence, said just as I was about to make a proper acknowledgment and remove my property, 'That sixpence would buy a hungry boy a loaf of bread—I have concluded that it is better to expend it so than in making you sick.' I was about to tell uncle Elihu that the pea-nut candy had not disagreed with me in the least, but pride choked down the half-uttered defence; and I left his presence, mournfully sympathizing with the poet, who never had a slice of bread, But it fell upon the sundred floor, And always on the battered side.'

My uncle's manner was generally so kind, however, that, before long, I forgot my disappointment about the sixpence, and visited him as usual. 'My son,' said he, at one of these visits, 'I wish you would light me a match to seal this letter.' I sprang forward with alacrity, proud to be useful on an occasion of evident importance; and after lighting the match, was about to throw it into the grate. The matches then were very long, with brimstone on both ends. 'Stop!' cried my uncle, in a voice that made me tremble, 'is it possible that you can be so wickedly wasteful?' I rescued the match, and stood surveying it in a vacant sort of surprise. 'That match,' continued my uncle, 'will do to light again I, never destroy them after one usage.' 'Well,' thought I to myself, 'if you are not the meanest old fellow that ever lived!' And in the excess of my boyish indignation,

I felt almost contaminated by being in the same apartment with him, or even in the house at all.

'Wait a moment,' said uncle Elihu, I would like to have you take this letter for me.' He placed it in my somewhat unwilling hands, and impressed the direction upon me again and again.

I sauntered indifferently off, whistling as I went; and finally reached the lane which had been indicated to me as the scene of my destination. On I went, past dirty boys and ragged girls—past scolding women and lazy men—past tenements of various degrees of dirt and wretchedness—until, at length, the one I sought was easily discerned by its air of cleanliness and comfort.

I mounted the rickety stairs, and was directed to the room by a girl with ear-rings and pink ribbons; who surveyed me critically, as people would examine a fish on dry land, or a salamander out of its proper element. In spite of this formidable discharge of eye-shot, I knocked boldly at the door; and having received permission to enter, I vanished from the sight of my examiner, who still maintained her position at the head of the stairs.

The apartment in which I found myself was as clean as hands could make it. A small wood fire was burning brightly, and flat-irons were placed in a row before it, ready for active service. At the table in the middle of the room stood a respectable-looking woman, whose countenance bore traces of severe struggles—probably with poverty and ill-health. To her I handed the letter, and sat down to wait the result.

A remarkable wide-awake looking baby in a cradle near by sufficed to while away the time; and I sat making faces at it, and watching its astonishment as it glanced inquiringly from its mother to me.

It had evidently been taught not to cry; I was about to reward its good behavior with a closer acquaintance, when an exclamation from the woman arrested my steps; and I beheld her wiping her eyes with the corner of her check apron.

'Dear, blessed man!' said she, with emotion, 'may he always experience the happiness he has given me!'

'What is the matter?' said I, with all the surprise with which those young barbarians, yelet boys, witness an exhibition of natural feeling.

'He has sent me twenty dollars,' she replied, 'for winter fuel.'

She must, surely, mean some one else! Not the contemptible individual who has just scolded me for not lighting both ends of a match!

'Who has sent it?' 'Who?' she replied in surprise; 'who should it be but Mr. Norton? This is not the first time he has done it, either—but for him, I should now be in the poor-house. It is a long story,' she continued, in answer to my inquiring look, 'but I think every one ought to know how nobly and quietly he does things.'

Had it been another person, I should not have cared to listen; but any history that would throw light upon the mysterious doings of uncle Elihu was welcomed with avidity. 'It is now some years ago,' said the woman, 'that on a cold rainy night in November, I wandered about the street seeking in vain for aid for a sick husband and two young children at home. We were almost homeless; our rent was in arrears, and our landlord threatened to turn us forth at the end of the week. I wandered about in despair, until it seemed as though I should lose my reason. I could not bear to beg; I had always been a respectable, hard-working woman, and beggars seemed to be very much like impostors until I was obliged to come to it myself.'

'At last I determined I would speak to every gentleman I met, and ask for one cent—surely they could not refuse that! The first one that I spoke to gave me no answer, and passed on; the second one said that it was too much trouble to put his hand into his pocket for so small a sum; another laughed and advised me to ask for sixpence; the fourth—but that was your uncle.'

'He stopped in the rain, and looked at me with a half frown.'

'And what good,' said he, 'would one cent do you? It would not buy even a loaf of bread—why not ask for more?'

'Alas!' said I, 'I find it impossible to get even that!'

'Suppose,' said Mr. Norton, 'that I should give you one cent—what would you do then?'

'I told him that I would ask others until I got sixpence, and then buy a loaf of bread.'

'Starving family at home, eh?' said he, half to himself; 'but how do I know that you are not a cheat? Such people often seem a great deal more respectable. I was cheated once by somebody that looked exactly like you—wonder if it isn't the same?'

'I now began to think that I had stopped a mad-man in the street, and turned to leave him; but Mr. Norton closed his umbrella with a snap, and fairly pushed me into a baker's shop, before which we had been talking.'

'I believe you know me here?' he asked. The man bowed respectfully, and Mr. Norton continued,

'I want you to give this woman two loaves of bread now and send her the same every day until I tell you to discontinue it.'

The baker put down my address; and I followed Mr. Norton into the street, too full to speak.

We next stopped at an umbrella store. 'Here,' said Mr. Norton, handing me his old one, 'now travel home as fast as you can; and to-morrow I will come and see you. I shall expect to see the sick husband and two children all complete; but mind now, that you don't borrow any for the occasion.'

That bread, the first mouthful in twenty-four hours, gave us all new life; and even my poor husband's face lit up with a ray of hope. When Mr. Norton came, the next day, I thought of entertaining angels unawares; and he, I am sure, found that I had told him no falsehood.

This was but the beginning of a series of good deeds, that he keeps up even now; for since my husband's death, I am sometimes rather straightened—although, thanks to Mr. Norton, I am supplied with work that keeps me from starving.

It was my uncle all through, and I could not doubt the truth of the story.

'Is there any answer?' said I, as I stood cap in hand.

'None,' she replied; 'words are useless to thank him—before I see him again, I will try and send him a more substantial proof of my gratitude.'

I now knew where uncle Elihu obtained those beautiful spotless shirt-bosoms, whose snowy surfaces seemed a perfect marvel of washer-woman skill. I trotted off like a wild pony that had suddenly got an idea in its head, and pulled up at uncle Elihu's office. Somewhat embarrassed, I delivered myself in the following equivocal manner:

'Uncle Elihu, I hadn't an idea that you ever gave anything to poor women! I was so much surprised when she told me how generous you were!'

My uncle smiled, as he replied, 'If I should not light the match at both ends, my son, I could not do this.'

In future I always felt a respect for uncle Elihu, while blowing out the match that had not been lighted at both ends. But my uncle's perseverance in keeping his good deeds to himself, and his determination to economize in the smallest trifles, even before those who would naturally misconstrue his motives, often led to mistakes and embarrassments. The story of the committee-men is quite a familiar one to those who knew him.

Two members of a society for the relief of somebody, somewhere, heard of uncle Elihu Norton and his great wealth, with the same pleasure that the discovery of a silver mine affords; and, without delay, hastened to secure the treasure.

The hour chosen by them for this friendly visit was the one between daylight and dark, when people's features resolve themselves into an imperfect mass, and imagination plays strange freaks with the shadows that loom up around. They were ushered into a drawing-room by a servant, who soon returned to say that Mr. Norton would be there immediately. As the girl delivered her message, she placed two small ends of candle in the articles denominated 'save alls'; and, after lighting them, withdrew.

The visitors looked at each other in astonishment, and a meaning smile passed over their faces.

'How very small!' said one, with a contemptuous laugh.

'It is my opinion,' said the other, 'that we are only wasting our time here—what can you expect of a man like this who uses save alls? Let us go in search of a more promising subject.'

'I expect no more than you do,' replied his companion, 'but I think it will be somewhat amusing to witness the man's anger, when he hears the object of our visit. Perhaps he expects to receive money, instead of giving it.'

So they concluded to await the result; and, just as they had come to this conclusion, uncle Elihu stood before them. He had heard the whole conversation; but he walked in with his usual calm air, and politely bowed to his visitors in apparent unconsciousness of their object. They informed him of it in much the same way that a school-boy recites his lesson; for they expected to get nothing, and went through it merely for form's sake.

My uncle listened attentively, asked a few clear-headed questions, and then, finding that the project was really a deserving one, handed them a fifty dollar bill.

A look of surprise passed between them; and they thanked him with some embarrassment, as they called to mind their rather uncomplimentary observations.

'Now, gentlemen,' said my uncle, 'I think it my duty to mention that I overheard your conversation, and I am, consequently, aware of your sentiments toward me. Permit me to observe that I consider them somewhat unfounded—were it not for these save alls, that you so much despise, I could not have given you this fifty dollar bill.'

The committee-men departed, with a lesson they never forgot; and my uncle pursued the even tenor of his way.

Uncle Elihu was dead; and the bright radiance of a summer morning streamed into the room on the day of his funeral. The sharp features in the coffin were the same that I had so often seen distorted with a cynical smile while living; and yet, as I bent over the rigid figure, a choking sensation of grief, rose to unman me, and I hid myself in a quiet corner to conceal the tears that I deemed more fit for girlish sorrow.

A massive silver plate ornamented the coffin—the heirs had shown all possible respect to one whose death would be to them a gain; and a line of handsome carriages extended as far as the eye could reach.

At length, however, the funeral pageant was over; and with ill-dissembled impatience, all were collected in the library to listen while the will was read.

That pale man, with the iron-gray hair, had been remarkable for quickness; but now, his proceedings seemed worse than slow, as he lingered, half fondly, over each unimportant sentence. I had expected nothing, and was, therefore, not disappointed; but a murmur of angry surprise showed that I was alone in my sympathy.

The bulk of the property was left to found a hospital for indigent old men who were unable to work; while legacies to such of his connections as were at all in need, showed that uncle Elihu had not forgotten that 'charity begins at home.' A certain sum was entrusted to my care for the use of the poor woman mentioned above; and in a letter to me, where his wishes were more thoroughly explained, he said:

'To you, my dear nephew, I leave but this piece of advice, for you are not in want of a more substantial legacy: In all the transactions of life carry out the principle of lighting the match at both ends; and you will live, as I have done, to be reviled by the rich, and blessed by those of whom our Saviour has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of one of these, ye have done it unto Me!"—Peterson's Magazine.

Strychnine.

This substance is obtained from the poison nut, or koocla, of Hindostan, called in botany, strychnos nux vomica. The fearful and most fatal powers of nux-vomica, have rendered it well known throughout the world. The poisonous principle of these nuts, called strychnine, from the generic name of the plant that yields it, was first obtained by Monsieur Pelletier, a Frenchman. He also found it in the St. Ignatius bean, a seed of another plant of the strychnos genera. The Upas, or poison tree of Java, also owes its effects to strychnine. To separate the strychnine from the nux-vomica requires a great deal of chemical skill. The process to obtain it is too complex to be attempted by an amateur; we therefore need not detail it here. The nux-vomica seed, or bean, as it is commonly termed, is remarkably tough, so much so, that it is impossible to reduce it to powder in any other way than by a rasp. When thus divided, it has been used to destroy farm vermin; hence it has acquired the name of ratsbane. Its action upon man is similar to its effects upon the inferior animals. A very weak decoction of nux-vomica possesses intoxicating qualities; hence it is used to adulterate weak beer for the purpose of giving it an artificial strength; and as the government, by an oversight, allows it to be imported at a nominal duty, a premium is thus indirectly offered to its use. In overdoses it produces involuntary spasmodic contraction of the muscles. A person drinking beer that contains nux-vomica, especially one that has not been hardened to its influence, will often observe a curious "twitching" about the body, and the limbs will "jump" without any apparent cause. Pure strychnine is however marvellously destructive to life. A single grain will kill a large dog. A horse has been poisoned by an infusion of one of the nuts. Half a grain will kill a rabbit in five minutes, and a like quantity placed on a wound in a man would destroy life in a quarter of an hour. Christians, who made all poisons his particular study, says, "I have killed a dog in two minutes with the sixth part of a grain of strychnine." From these remarks, however, we must not conclude that strychnine is a useless substance, for in certain complaints—paralysis and allied diseases—it has been used with the best effects.

Quincy Savings Bank.

At the Semi-Annual Meeting of the Board of Trustees, held April 1, 1856, the following Report was accepted and ordered to be printed:—

In accordance with the By-Laws of the Bank, the Treasurer herewith submits to the Trustees his Twenty-second Semi-Annual Report.

John C. Randall, Treasurer of the Quincy Savings Bank, in account with said Bank:

DR.

To amount now on deposit from
916 Depositors, including dividends which have been added to their account	168,430.56.
To amount of interest collected	3,223.79.
	171,654.35

CR.

By amount of Loans secured by mortgage	107,960.00
" amt. Loans on Pers'l. security	7,849.97
" amount Loans to Towns	23,147.11
" amt. Loans on Bank Stock	1,250.00
" amt. Invested in Bank Stock	25,345.91
" amt. Cash on hand	6,161.36
	171,654.35

The sum of $150,589.00 is this day entitled to a dividend of two and a half per centum, for six months; and $805.00 to 1 and 1-4 per cent. for three months; it is proposed that the Trustees declare these dividends, which will require the sum of $3872.20.

From the above statement it appears that the amount of interest already collected is	3,223.79
To which add	3,996.63

Interest accrued but not yet collected, amounting to	6,920.42
Deduct amt. of 22d Semi-Annual dividend to be made this day	3,872.20

Leaving a balance of 3948.13 Which is a new accumulating Fund.

A close of this, his first year of service, the Treasurer congratulates the Trustees and the Depositors generally on the prosperous condition of the Institution. The number of Depositors and the amount on deposit are now larger than at any former period.

The Bank holds ten shares of stock in the Grocer's Bank, Boston, on which there will probably be some loss. This statement is made in order to correct certain exaggerated reports which are current in relation to this matter.

JOHN C. RANDALL, Treasurer. Quincy, April 1st, 1856.

The undersigned, a Committee appointed for the purpose, have examined the above Report and find it, together with the vouchers for the same, to be correct.

JOHN SAVILL, JAMES NEWCOMB, CHARLES MARSH. April 1st, 1856.

For Mother's Sake.

A father and son were fishing near New York city, recently. The boat suddenly capsized, and they were thrown into the water. The father who was an expert swimmer, his son could not swim at all, at once commenced to aid the lad. He, seeing that his father was rapidly becoming exhausted, calmly said to him, 'Never mind me; save yourself for mother's sake.' God bless that boy, and God be thankful that his father and himself were rescued from the peril in which they were involved.

'For Mother's sake.' There spoke a true son and hero. He knew that his tender years fully fitted him to support and sustain his father. That if his father persisted she might be reduced to want as well as steeped in sorrow; that if the oak fell the ivy would fall and die. So he hid his soul be quiet amid the troubled waters, amid the excitement and apprehensions that such a scene must engender, and resolved to die for his mother, unless indeed, some hand was stretched forth for his safety, and the safety of his father. It was all right, because it was done for 'Mother's sake.'

Would we say the same thing under the same circumstances? Would you boy? you, young man? you, man of years and sorrows? While you admire the young hero for his intrepidity and affection, do you feel that you would imitate his example if occasion required? Do you love, do you prize your Mother?

He who propounds this is motherless. Years twain have passed since the world, grey-haired matron, who called him son, laid off the dusty vestment of earthly travel and was clothed in the garments of the saints. He tells you—and his words are wrung from suffering experience, that if you love your Mother, do not prize your Mother, now, you will hereafter. Death opens the fountain of surviving hearts, and loss shows how little we esteemed possession.

It is well to hold up an example like the one we have quoted to the public gaze, for, by so doing, some hard heart may be softened, some vascilating heart confirmed, some warm heart made warmer. A man is safe who inscribes this motto upon his phylactery—'For Mother's Sake'—Buffalo Express

Girls Should Learn to Keep House.

No young lady can be too well instructed in anything that will affect the comfort of a family. Whatever position in society she may occupy, she needs a practical knowledge of the duties of a housekeeper. She may be placed in such circumstances that it will be unnecessary for to perform much domestic labor; but on this account she needs no less knowledge than if she was obliged to preside personally over the cooking stove and pantry. Indeed, we have often thought it was more difficult to direct others, and requires more experience, than to do the same work with our own hands.

Mothers are frequently so nice and particular in their domestic arrangements, that they do not like to give up any part of their care to their children. This is a great mistake, for they are often burdened with labor, and need relief. Children should be early taught to make themselves useful—to assist their parents in every way in their power, and consider it a privilege to do so.

Young people cannot realize the importance of a thorough knowledge of housewifery, but those who have suffered the inconveniences and mortifications of ignorance. Children should be early indulged in their disposition to bask and experiment in cooking in various ways. It is often but a troublesome help they afford, still it a great advantage to them.

Some mothers give their daughters the care of housekeeping, each a week by turns. It seems to us a good arrangement, and a most useful part of their education. Domestic labor is by no means incompatible with the highest degree of refinement and mental culture. Many of the most elegant and accomplished women have looked well to their household duties, and have honored themselves and their husbands by so doing.

Interesting Facts upon Eyes and Ears.

The organ of vision is considered the most delicate organization in the human frame; yet many who have been born blind have been enabled to see by surgical operations, and the following is an interesting fact concerning one of the class. This youth had become thirteen years of age when his eyes were cecached by a surgeon. He thought scarlet the most beautiful color; black was painful. He fancied every object touched him; and he could not distinguish by sight what he perfectly knew by feeling; for instance, the cat and the dog. When his second eye was cecached he remarked that the objects were not so large in appearance to this as to the one opened at first. Pictures he considered only parti-colored surfaces, and a miniature absolutely astonished him, seeming to him like putting a bushel into a pint.

Stanley, the organist, and many blind musicians, have been the best performers of their time; and a school-mistress in England, could discover that two boys were playing in a distant corner of the room instead of studying, although a person using his eyes could not detect the slightest sound. Professor Sanderson, who was blind, could in a few moments, tell how many persons were in a mixed company, and of each sex. A blind French lady could dance in figure dances, sew, and thread her own needle. A blind man in Derbyshire, England, has actually been a surveyor and planner of roads, his ear guiding him as to distance as accurately as the eye to others; and the late Justice Fielding, who was blind, on walking into a room for the first time, after speaking a few words, said, 'This room is about twenty-two feet long, eighteen wide, and twelve high,' all of which was revealed to him with accuracy through the medium of his ear. Verily, 'We are fearfully and wonderfully made.'

Every Thing for the Best.

'My dear daughter, I am afraid that you will be disappointed in the pleasure you anticipated this evening, as you perceive it rains very hard.'

'I hope not, mother, although I see no prospect of its holding up, and you know I cannot go in the rain; however, I will try to bear the disappointment as well as I can.'

'Be assured, my dear, every thing is done for the wisest purposes, and that if you are disappointed in going, you will reap some advantage from it.'

'I cannot see how my not going to the party will profit me in the least, but I will endeavor to believe so.'

'No, my dear, perhaps you cannot, but there is One who can, and if you are not engaged, I will relate to you an anecdote, which will illustrate what I have been telling you."

"Last year, a friend of mine engaged to go with a large party to the theatre, and they had all promised themselves a great deal of pleasure, as a distinguished actor intended to perform; however in the evening such a storm of wind and rain arose, that they all determined to postpone their visit to another occasion, except one gentleman, who said he did not care for any of the elements, and that he would go. That night, they were aroused by a great noise and tumult, which proceeded from a fire in the other end of the city, but when they inquired where the fire was, what do you think was the answer? The theatre where they had all intended to go had accidentally caught fire, and the wind being very high, the whole building, together with some other houses near it, were demolished, and that gentleman who despised the elements, escaped with difficulty."

"Well, mother, whenever I am disappointed in future, I will not repine, but recollect 'that every thing happens for the best.'"

REMOVAL. Mrs. Clapp it will be perceived by reference to her advertisement in another column has removed her large and fashionable assortment of Millinery Goods from the room over Mr. John Brierley's store, to more convenient apartments in the house of Mr. Charles Hall, on Hancock street, third building from Mr. George Saville's store. Her description of goods is large, and of every variety suitable for the season. To the notice of our lady readers, we would respectfully direct their attention to this establishment.

MESSRS. RUSSELL & CO., Town Hall, opposite Stone Church. This firm has opened their "Spring trade" in a manner unequalled by any other similar establishments in the county. Their rich stock of goods, their extremely low prices, and the most accomplished artists, recommend this house strongly to the favor of our citizens.

The cash system which the Messrs. R. & Co. have adopted is the grand secret of their success in trade; whereby they are enabled to equip in the most approved fashion, and of the best material at such small profits.

It will well pay those in want of such articles, to make one visit to witness how admirably the experiment works.

See advertisement in another column.

OLD FOLK'S CONCERT. This Concert, which came off on Thursday Evening last, at Town Hall, drew one of the largest and most fashionable audiences of the season. The Music, and in fact, every thing relating to the performance, bore evident marks of the old school, of the days of

"Aud laus syne."

It was a happy conception of the rigid outlines of character of our ancestors, and took mightily with the audience. We hope to see them renewed; with a little variation, blending the past with the present—which we are sure will render them the most amusing, instructive and successful concerts of the day.

TO ADVERTISERS AGAIN. A few of their favors are necessarily deferred until our next.

Business revival. Metropolitan proclivities of Quincy.—Demise of William Bugbee, M. D.—Summers of the Braintree Annexation Bill, in the House of Representatives.—Immobility of the Liquor Law.—Legislative Jeu de mots.—Gunpowder explosion at Weymouth.

As I now write, with the window up, the weather is genial and beautiful; and the business community, to use a Gallicism, are quite rife. The prospects were never better for a good business season than the present. The shoe and Granite business, two great branches of enterprise in your town, will be in the full tide of successful operation as the spring opens. Quincy is rapidly emerging into a large town. With the annexation of Braintree Neck, which after six years trial, must now come, she will have over seven thousand inhabitants; and the next decade will give a population of ten thousand. By a provision of the State Constitution the General Court empowered to grant city charters to any town whose inhabitants exceed in number twelve thousand; if a majority of the votes at a legal meeting consent. The child is not only born, but is probably of age, who will live to see the birth place of Howard and Adams transformed into a city.

The death of Dr. Bugbee, by that scourge from our New England climate, pulmonary consumption, was appropriately noticed in your last week's Patriot. I knew him well. He was an upright, worthy man, and good physician. Dr. Bugbee was a graduate of Harvard University, in the class of 1817, and a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society. His literary attainments were very respectable. In the bloom of life he has passed from earth, but the remembrance of his virtues live with very many, who sorrow for him.

The annexation project of a portion of Braintree to Quincy, has had all sorts of luck in the House of Representatives since my last. On Saturday the Bill on its passage to be engrossed was rejected by a decided vote, and much to the satisfaction of the Hon. Representative from Braintree and his friends, who have certainly proved themselves valiant knights in their attempts to bill the Bill. But parliamentary tactics were used; a reconsideration was moved, by some one voting in the majority, and when the subject again came regularly before the House, the reconsideration was sustained, and the Bill finally reached the enacting stage, where there is no back-out, by a majority of two to one. It now has to pass the ordeal of the Senate, and then to the Governor, before it becomes a law, with almost a certainty of success. This new slice of territory is of good dimensions, bringing with it about an hundred thousand dollars of increased valuable property to the tax list of Quincy. The citizens now of Braintree Neck, but who will soon be of Quincy, are indebted in no small measure to the diligence and good management of the Quincy and Milton delegation for the annexation. The Liquor Bill was to come from the Legislative Committee this week, but it has been postponed for ten days to allow time for the Minority Report to be prepared adverse to the law. On a modification of the existing law, the sentiments of the Committee are nearly equally divided. The better opinion here, now is, that the law will undergo no change, the present session.

A kind of Jeu de mots, or play upon words, has been going on at the State House, the past few days; the Senate maintaining that in the proposed Amendment of the Constitution, on the word Councillor; it should be spelt Councillor says the Senate, but the House says it should be spelt Councillor. And this grave matter is still unsettled. Mr. Editor which is the right way?

I was sorry to learn from the Boston Journal, that on Saturday Evening last, the law office of Fisher A. Kingsbury, Esq., at Weymouth Landing was blown up with gunpowder, causing great consternation in the village, and doing much damage to General Kingsbury's property. In his official capacity as Justice of the Peace, it is said, he has recently ordered the destruction of several parcels of liquor, which were brought before him, under the Liquor Law; and it is supposed the outrage arose from this fact.

Miscellaneous.

Self-Sacrifice.

"I am sure you will like her; she is a sweet girl, far nicer-looking than any of us. As papa always says, she is 'the flower of the flock!'"

This encomium on an absent sister was addressed by Anna Leigh to her lover, Charles Taylor, as they sat together one fine summer evening on a green bank in Mr. Leigh's garden.

"I am sure I shall not think her nicer-looking than some I know," replied Charles Taylor, gazing admiringly into Anna's face, which, usually somewhat too pale and still, was now rosy, and sparkling with animation, as she anticipated the return of her beloved sister. For Selina Leigh had been absent on the continent three whole years, with an elderly cousin, who was travelling for her health. And now the young girl was really on her way home at last; indeed, she was expected that very week, with all her description of Paris, and Brussels, and Berlin; of Naples, Rome, and Florence; of the glaciers of Switzerland, and the orange-groves of Sicily; with her little knick-knacks, and relics, and foreign rarities; and, best of all in the estimation of the loving souls that waited to embrace her, with her own bright sunny face and warm heart, unspoiled and uncooled, as they firmly believed, by those common strangers, absence and novelty.

"I shall still think my Anna the best and handsomest," again whispered the lover, as he drew his betrothed closer to him.

The twilight was closing softly and sofly around the youthful pair as Charles said this, and soon the moon looked down from the old elm trees upon their lengthened interview, as they lingered in happy converse, unmindful that the dew was falling heavily, or that Mr. Leigh would be expecting his eldest daughter in-doors, to superintend that pleasantest of meals, an early family supper.

"Sister Anna! sister Anna!" called a young voice from the house, "where are you! Supper has been on the table these ten minutes, and papa is quite impatient!"

Anna and her lover obeyed the call, and the social meal was merrily despatched. Then came music and pleasant chat, and after 'one last song,' which Charles Taylor begged for, and Anna gave in her happiest style, the young man departed for his not very distant home.

"Selina Leigh! indeed," he muttered to himself, previous to jumping into bed. "A Frenchified, coquettish miss, as I dare say she is. Give me a true-hearted, gentle, modest Englishwoman, like my Anna!"

It had been one of the happiest evenings that Anna Leigh had ever passed, one of those unalloyed periods of our existence, when love, and youth, and blissful prospects, and a splendid sky, and balmy air, and soothing sounds, and sweet odors, and moonlight, combine to bestow upon us for one or two short hours a glimpse of an earthly paradise. Yet, as the betrothed maiden in her turn retired to rest, a cloud was upon her spirits, and she felt a heavy, though vague, presentiment of approaching evil. Can it be that a true and deep affection endows us for the time with a species of clairvoyance?

"Sister Anna," called out little Lucy Leigh, the evening following that on which our story begins, "do just come here. How strange the sky looks!" Anna rose, and went to the window.

"There is an awful storm approaching," she said; "and Charles is to be here again to-night. I do trust he will be safely housed before it begins!"

The sky grew darker and darker, save at one single point, which bore that peculiar hue indicating the locality of an advancing tempest. There was a fearful stillness over all things, as if nature held her breath with apprehension. The very leaves of the elm trees participated in the general hush; then a sudden rustling stirred them.

"Oh! what a vivid flash," exclaimed Anna, covering her eyes with her hand. "The storm is very near, almost over the house. Don't cry, little Lucy, but come and sit upon my knee, out of the way of the window. Wait! I must close the sash."

As Anna was doing so, she heard the sound of carriage-wheels, and waiting a moment to see what it was—for a sudden flutter of the heart told her that perhaps her anxiously-expected sister had arrived—she perceived Charles Taylor approaching the garden gate. At the same moment, a vehicle drew up before it, and the young man stopped. The coachman said something to him, and Anna beheld her lover hastily throw open the door, while the driver was slowly dismounting. There was a short pause; Charles bent forward into the coach, and reappeared, bearing a slender female form in his arms. Anna stood transfixed for a moment, and then ran out into the storm, heedless of the vivid flashes that darted their blue forks hither and thither over the garden.

"Oh! Charles, how glad I am you are come! And is this our dear Selina? But, good gracious!" exclaimed the affectionate girl, as she caught sight of the pale face that drooped over the young man's shoulder. "Oh! Charles, she is not!"

"No, not seriously injured, my sweet Anna," replied he, extending his hand towards his betrothed, who appeared ready to faint herself. "Here! lean on my arm. I can manage you both. She has been dreadfully alarmed by the storm, that is all. And no wonder. Mercy! what a crash!"

The three hastened into the house, and it was time, for the rain began to pour down in torrents. The poor coachman, who followed to the hall to demand his fare, which had been forgotten in his hurry, was wet through in an instant. While Charles was settling with him, Selina, who had been laid gently upon a sofa, opened her large blue eyes, and gazed around with a look of bewilderment.

"Dearest Selina," said Anna, who was bending over her, and crying heartily between the pleasure and the fright, "my own sister, you are safe at home, with those who love you."

"Ah!" sighed Selina, and then she muttered a few words in Italian. But, dearest Anna, she resumed, languidly, "how you are crying, and what a figure you will be! Where is papa? Is he at home? And is that Lucy? Come here, child. How you are grown! But you are not so pretty as you were."

Anna dried her tears, and Lucy withdrew her little hand from Selina's careless grasp. Both of them felt chilled and repulsed by their travelled sister's words and manner. An awkward pause ensued, and it was a relief when Charles Taylor re-entered the room, and had to be formally introduced. Anna looked at Selina as she expressed her thanks to her late cavalier, and confessed to herself that she had never seen a more beautiful girl.

"She looks very odd," remarked Charles; and then the young couple forgot the noble self-abnegation that had left them free, and thought only of each other.

Meanwhile, Anna was kneeling in her own little chamber, her face buried in her clasped hands, and the bitter sobs of anguish coming thick and fast.

Oh! woman, woman, love's own martyr upon earth, surely the peculiar greatness of thy martyrdom consists in the secret endurance of its pangs. But an hour elapsed, and Anna Leigh, with a blanched, yet perfectly tranquil face, passed from her chamber, and resumed her usual active superintendence of household affairs.

"Then you cannot forgive, Anna? you cannot take me back again to your heart, but repentant as I am?"

Anna gazed calmly and kindly upon her former lover.

"I forgive you, Charles, but the past can never be recalled. Think not of breaking your vows a second time. Selina is young and thoughtless; you must excuse her folly, and endeavor to acquire a salutary influence over her. Everything can be done, Charles, by patience and love."

"But the patience of a Patriarch could not last it out! Only see how abominably she flirts with that James Stewart! You, Anna, never looked at another during our engagement!"

Anna smiled sadly.

"I know it; and you see I could give you up when it became necessary."

"Yes, I believed you cold, but I have thought differently since."

Anna started, and a flush of pain passed across her tranquil brow.

deed an added pang that rendered the burden almost impossible to be borne. Night after night did poor Anna lay her aching head on her pillow, with almost a prayer that daylight might not return, to bring the whole weary routine over again.

And Selina, how did she receive Charles's increasing attentions? Why, she laughed, and chatted, and talked sentiment, and alternately played the languid beauty, dying with heat, or fatigue, or delicacy, and almost unable to rise from her couch, where she took care to recline in the most graceful attitude possible, or the feeling, sensitive, enthusiastic beauty, with a smile on her moment, and a tear the next, tremblingly alive to a melody, an odor, the fleeting splendors of the firmament, or the changing tints of earth. This latter phase of affection it was that had chiefly fascinated the fickle lover of Anna; and he dwelt on the beautiful and skilfully-varied countenance of his new intruder, until it was almost with aversion that he turned to gaze on the still, pure, but, as he now chose to term it, monotonous expression of his betrothed.

"No," he said to himself, as he paced the garden-walk in the absence of the sisters, one morning that he had called earlier than usual, "no, I do her no wrong. She is incapable of the ardent love that I require to make me happy in a wife. The mortification of seeing herself supplanted once over, she will go on just the same as ever, until a lover more suitable to her cold temperament."

The young man's reflections were interrupted by the appearance of Selina from the house, arrayed in a white muslin peignoir, according to one of the foreign habits she had brought with her into her father's simple abode. Her auburn tresses were gathered carelessly back from her fair, oval visage, her blue eyes were half shaded by their long lashes, while a moss rose, with which Charles had presented her the evening before, and which she had placed in her bosom, and the delicate bloom of her complexion and lips, made her as fair a nymph as ever left an early breakfast to salute the morning sun. Charles hastened to her; never had she appeared so fascinating. The young man forgot their brief acquaintanceship, forgot his engagement with another, and that other her own sister, and in agitated accents poured forth his tale of love over the little hand that struggled but feebly within his manly grasp.

"Dearest, loveliest Selina—"

But we will not attempt to paint a lover's rhapsody. Long ere it concluded, a light step was heard behind them, and a gentle face, pale as death, but firm with a fixed and noble resolve, bent forward and kissed Selina's blushing, downcast forehead.

"Fear nothing, dearest Selina; if you love him, he is yours. And you Charles, look me in the face. You see I do not suffer; yet the compressed and ashy lips quivered even as she spoke. "Take her, take my beautiful sister. She will suit you better than I. I am well content to break off our engagement."

"Is this true, Anna?" asked Charles, after an agitated pause. "Can you really act so nobly, so?"

"No more words, I have said it," replied Anna, in a voice so unlike her own, that the others started. And then, in a moment, she was gone.

"She looked very odd," remarked Charles; and then the young couple forgot the noble self-abnegation that had left them free, and thought only of each other.

Meanwhile, Anna was kneeling in her own little chamber, her face buried in her clasped hands, and the bitter sobs of anguish coming thick and fast.

Oh! woman, woman, love's own martyr upon earth, surely the peculiar greatness of thy martyrdom consists in the secret endurance of its pangs. But an hour elapsed, and Anna Leigh, with a blanched, yet perfectly tranquil face, passed from her chamber, and resumed her usual active superintendence of household affairs.

"Then you cannot forgive, Anna? you cannot take me back again to your heart, but repentant as I am?"

Anna gazed calmly and kindly upon her former lover.

"I forgive you, Charles, but the past can never be recalled. Think not of breaking your vows a second time. Selina is young and thoughtless; you must excuse her folly, and endeavor to acquire a salutary influence over her. Everything can be done, Charles, by patience and love."

"But the patience of a Patriarch could not last it out! Only see how abominably she flirts with that James Stewart! You, Anna, never looked at another during our engagement!"

Anna smiled sadly.

"I know it; and you see I could give you up when it became necessary."

"Yes, I believed you cold, but I have thought differently since."

Anna started, and a flush of pain passed across her tranquil brow.

"Whatever you may have thought, Charles," she said, with some reserve of manner, "you are mistaken in your present application. You cannot play at fast-and-loose with me. I repeat it; forgive poor Selina, and endeavor to acquire a saving influence over her. She needs a rational, judicious husband."

"Anna's disinterested pleadings were not without their effect. Besides advising Charles she seized a moment when Selina was in one of her more natural humors, to beseech her to lay aside a course of conduct that could only end in her own disgrace and her lover's misery; and the beautiful, but vain and artificial girl, promised amendment."

After many vicissitudes of feeling, many quarrels and reconciliations, the latter generally brought about by Anna's watchful affection, the young couple at length was married, and went to reside within a couple of miles from the house of Anna's father. But they were not thoroughly happy. Selina, even as a wedded wife, could never forego a certain flightiness of manner, which, however passable in the gay circles of society, endangered her reputation, and won her many an evil opinion among her country neighbors; and her husband, when the fascination of her beauty had passed away, sighed inwardly as he thought how he had exchanged a pure English heart for the meretricious attractions of foreign travel. For, liberal and benevolent as we may wish to be to our continental neighbors, it is very certain that modes of thought and action obtained abroad that injure the delicate bloom of a British maiden's feelings; and many a careful English mother has had cause to rue the day when, for the sake of a little foreign polish, she exiled her daughter from the purifying influences of her own fireside.

But how did Anna Leigh endure the loneliness that was thenceforth her lot? For we need scarcely say, that a heart like hers could never live again. Why, she became the benefactress of the village, the loving and beloved aunt and instructress of her beautiful sister's neglected children. And when little Lucy Leigh, in her turn, found a home of her own, her husband affirmed that he had been first attracted towards the merry little maiden by the knowledge that her mind and manners had been trained by her noble eldest sister—the patient, steadfast, self-sacrificing old maid, Anna Leigh.

Two Kinds of Riches.

A little boy sat by his mother. He looked deep at the fire and was silent. When the deep thought passed away, his eye grew bright as he spoke:

"Mother, I wish I was rich!"

"Why do you wish you were rich, my son?"

"Because," said the child, "every one praises the rich, every one inquires for them. The stranger at our table yesterday, asked who was the richest man in the village. At school there is a boy who does not learn; he takes no pains to say his lessons well. Sometimes he speaks evil words. But the children don't blame him, for they say he is a wealthy boy."

The mother thought the child in danger of believing wealth might take the place of goodness, as an excuse for indolence, or cause them to be held in honor who led unworthy lives. So she asked him:

"What is it to be rich?"

He answered: "I do not know. Yet tell me how to become rich, that all may ask after me and praise me."

"To become rich is to get money. For this you must wait until you become a man."

"The boy looked sorrowful and said: 'Is there not some other way of becoming rich, that I may begin now?'"

She answered: "The gain of money is not the only nor the true wealth. Fires may burn it, the floods drown it, the winds may sweep it away, the moth may eat it, rust waste it, and the robber may make it his prey. Men are worried with the toil of getting it, but they leave it behind at last. They die and carry nothing away. The soul of the richest prince of the earth goeth forth like that of the way-side beggar, without a garment. Those who possess it are always praised by men, but do they receive the praise of God?"

"Then," said the boy, "may I begin to gather this kind of riches, or must I wait till I am a man?"

The mother laid her hand upon his little head and said: "To-day, if ye will hear his voice; for he hath promised that those who seek early shall find."

And the child said: "Teach me how I may become rich before God."

Then she looked tenderly on him and said: "Kneel down every night and morning, and ask that you may love the dear Saviour and trust in him; obey his word and strive all the days of your life to be good to all; so, though you may be poor in the world you shall be rich in faith, and an heir to the kingdom of heaven."

The Test of Character.

What a man really is, will appear in the truest light under his own roof and by his own fireside. I can believe that he is a Christian, when I know that he faithfully takes up the daily duties and bears the crosses that cluster within his own doors. I shall think that the world rightly calls him a philanthropist, when notwithstanding common faults and infirmities, he receives the spontaneous award of the good husband and father, and the kindness of nature is reflected in the very air and light of the dwelling. And talk of noble deeds! wherever it is beheld manifestations of a more beautiful self-sacrifice, a more generous heroism, than in the labors and in the endurance of thousands of men and women shut from the world's observation in silent nooks and corners of this very city, amidst the relationship, and cares, and struggles of home. But whether it be in forms of good or evil, we know that the real elements of character, the genuine moral qualities of people, must be expressed there.—Rev. E. H. Chapin.

Queer Tom.

Tom Flosser was the queerest boy I ever knew. I can't think he ever cried. I never saw him. If Fleda found her tulips all rooted up by her pet puppy, and cried as little girls will, Tom was sure to come round the corner, whistling, and say,

"What makes you cry, my infant? Can you cry tulips? do you think every sob makes a root or blossom? Here! let's try and right them."

So he would pick up the poor flowers, put their roots into the ground again, whistling all the time; make the bed look smooth and fresh, and take Fleda off to look at a pretty snake, or to hunt hen's nests in the barn. Neither did he do any differently in his own troubles. One day his great kite snapped the string, and flew away, out of sight. Tom stood still one moment, and then turned round to come home, whistling all the time.

"Why, Tom?" said I, "ain't you sorry to lose that kite?"

"Yes! but what's the use? I can't take more than a minute to feel bad; 'sorry' will not bring the kite back, and I want to make another."

Just so when he broke his leg.

"Poor Tom," cried Fleda, "you can't play any mo-o-o-re!"

"I'm not poor, either. You cry for me; I don't cry for myself, and I have a fine time to whistle. Besides, when I get well, I shall beat every boy in school on the multiplication table; for I say it over, till it makes me sleepy, every time it makes my leg aches!"

Tom Flosser was queer, certainly; but I wish a great many more people were queer that way.—School Fellow.

Journey from Cincinnati (O.) to Rome, Ga.

DEAR SIR: Many who have not had experience imagine travelling to be uninterrupted pleasure. You will perceive after reading this communication, that it is not so. One meets with many detentions and annoyances, that takes much from our enjoyments. And there is a feeling of loneliness which have often had, when wandering among the streets of a strange city; a feeling, that I was out of sympathy with the place and people, which caused many dull hours. My heart was with friends who were far away, and nothing that was beautiful or curious could effectually dispense the cloud of sadness. Omitting mention of places more familiar, I commence my notes with a brief description of Cincinnati, which, with great truthfulness, is styled the Queen City of the West; and for the regularity of its streets, is not equaled by any in the Union, save Philadelphia. The land rises from the river, leaving a valley for its location, and forming hills on all sides, except the southern. The material used in the construction of some of the finest churches, the public and private buildings, is a freestone, of a rich color, which, as the architecture is in good taste, gives them a beautiful appearance. It may well boast of its market, having there, both Northern and Southern productions. As bituminous coal is used, a smoke always hangs over the city, and every thing has a dingy appearance; but it makes a bright and cheerful fire. There are many Germans and Jews; the latter having several synagogues in which they worship on Saturdays, closing their stores and keeping them open on our Sabbath.

Their levee for a quarter of a mile is lined with steamboats, and presents the liveliest appearance at all times, Sundays hardly excepted, as boats often start on that day than others.

After a stay of eleven days I took passage in a fine boat for Nashville, distant by water, six hundred and seventy-eight miles, making a rapid progress, until within eighteen miles of Louisville, when, of a sudden, we found ourselves fast upon a sand bar, where we remained in not a very contented mood, for ten hours, until, to our great joy, a boat came to our aid; lightening our own of a portion of its freight. The weather had become intensely cold, and the river was so much frozen when we were again under weigh, that it took nearly all night to reach Louisville. We divided our time while waiting for the opening navigation, between that place and New Albany, Indiana, and considered the latter city the pleasantest. The former is about half the size of Cincinnati, and quite inferior to it. While there, the Christmas holidays commenced extending till after New Year's day; during which, the slaves for the most part have the free disposal of their time. There are rapids in the river opposite the city, around which, as they can only be passed in very high water, a canal is constructed. Porter, the Kentucky giant, keeps a coffee house near it, and is said to be the tallest man in the world; measures seven feet nine inches, but is not stout in proportion, but so thin that his appearance is very singularly.

After a detention of sixteen days again, we are slowly making our way through fields of floating ice down the "Beautiful" River, which is the meaning of the Indian word Ohio; but I saw nothing in it or the scenery around, to render it deserving of that name. About seven miles below Louisville, Salt River flows into it, so called, from the salt works on its banks, whose workmen, are noted for their pugilistic skill—and the phrase, "Rowed up Salt River," was first applied to those defeated in that kind of contests. At the mouth of the Cumberland, a soft wind from the south met us and made the remaining two hundred miles up that river very pleasant. Once a deer swam the river in front, and after ascending the bank, gazed around at us enquiringly, then bounded off, clearing bushes and fences with perfect ease, pursued by some dogs that happened to be near.

We were much pleased with Nashville—its location is high, with regular streets, and founded on a rock. The Capitol (considered the finest of any state) is built of a light sandstone, and placed upon the highest point of the city; from which you behold quite an extensive range of country. I tried the two best hotels, and would give the preference to the Verandah. At this place I was forced to go back to the old fashioned conveyance of stage-coach, and after a most tedious ride of two nights and a day, was better able to appreciate the superior advantages of our present mode of travelling. The first night we experienced no inconvenience from a bad road, but on the next day, as we approached the Cumberland mountains, the road became worse and worse, till we came to the centre and highest parts of the range. Our coach was changed for one of the roughest and hardest kind of vehicles, called the "mountaineer;" in which we, the only three passengers, as the wheels struck a rock or went into a gulph, were thrown from our seats, from side to side, in imminent danger of blows and bruises. We were all night in passing the two highest of the range; during that time saw but one house, a log cabin, where we took supper. We forded streams whose waters came up to the carriage body. In addition to a break upon the wheels, one was fastened with a chain, as we descended the steepest parts. Many times we thought the coach upsetting, and a little farther inclination would have thrown it in some places down high precipices. I could then see, at intervals, the huge jutting rocks far down, and thought of the step which was only between me and death; a little rock which might have woods filled with flowers and fragrant shrubs, in the clearness of its atmosphere, climate, and in many other respects, I have seen no other region in this country that can equal it. But it has the curse of slavery, which a year and eight months residence there, gave me an opportunity to observe its deleterious effect upon both white and black; which I intended to speak of, but lest I should weary, now close. Yours, ALBERT.

The Temperance Movement.

Is silently accomplishing its object. Thus far, it has more than met the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Five hundred names are informed, have already been prefixed to the pledge, and that numerous others are in readiness to follow this praise-worthy example. A feeling appeared to pervade the community that a crisis had arrived in our moral affairs which called for speedy action. It has been met, and, we believe, with most happy results. It is a fatal delusion to suppose that intemperate habits, can be successfully dealt with by coercive measures, or that the evil propensities of our nature may be eradicated by penal enactments. Man, in the work of regeneration, must be left to himself; to the exercise of those faculties with which he is endowed by his Creator. Good and evil are here placed before him, and he should be left free to choose for himself. To be made to feel that he is a moral agent—with powers, which if properly cultered, will raise him to the highest pinnacle in the scale of civilization; or if neglected and abused, sink him to a level with the vilest thing which creeps upon the face of the earth. Temperance reformers should remember this—and strive to be moral physicians, not ministers of the law—they will have to deal with diseases, not with crimes.

We are rejoiced to hear that the cause is in the hands of wise and discreet managers, we therefore wish it God's speed.

Loss by Fire—Propagators for Insurance Companies.—Serious Reflections.—Legislative—Civil actions, Plaintiffs and Defendants of the Constitution—European News. Waits from Washington.—Probable Success of the Democratic party in the Presidential election by a large majority.

A serious and growing evil to the prosperity of our country is the alarming prevalence of fires. In the United States within the past three months, the losses by fire has been over three millions of dollars; and our own city the past week has been touched to the tune of nearly three hundred thousand. It is a humiliating fact to state that more fires occur yearly in the United States, than over the whole continent of Europe, including Great Britain. By the destruction of the Gerrish market, on Portland Street, the last week, swallowing up two hundred thousand dollars; many of our country Insurance offices have suffered severely. City risks are better than rural risks if taken judiciously. Nearly all buildings in the country are wooden; in cities the larger portion of them are stone materials. It is the unceasing duty of the directors of Insurance Companies as losses happen, and new facts develop themselves, growing out of the investigation of losses, to adopt all prophylactic measures for prevention. Insurance against the hazard of fire is a science, whose operations are yet but imperfectly known in this country. In every case the standing and character of the parties applying for insurance; their interest in, and occupancy of, the property, and its relative position as to other buildings, should be carefully investigated by the surveyor or agent taking the insurance. No small share of the property and good standing of any company depend upon the sound judgment and probity of all who act in the capacity of insurance agents. Place no temptation in the way by over insurance, and one evil is removed. All fires occur from two causes, either by accident or design. From past experience the hazard is as great from incendiarism as causality. The risks where steam engines are used: all carpenter shops, furniture warehouses, and fancy goods establishments, printing establishments, book-binders and lumber-yards, should be avoided by Mutual Fire Insurance Companies. To insure their property take risks small in amount, at a higher rate of premium and for short terms. But I may notice this subject more fully hereafter.

A large amount of business has been accomplished by our Legislature the past week. A recess will probably be taken about the middle of May. On Wednesday, in the House, the Bill to enable parties in civil actions to be witnesses therein, was passed to a third reading, 128 to 107. It is as follows: "Parties in all civil actions may be admitted to testify in their own favor, and may be called as witnesses by the opposite party; providing that no party so testifying, shall be compelled to criminate himself."

If this Bill should become a law, it will be a perfect innovation in our justice and jury trials, touching all civil matters, and one evidence, that our age is progressive. In all matters of litigation, giving the plaintiff and defendant a chance to tell their own stories; it is a direct way to reach justice. The resolves providing for an amendment of the Constitution for districting the State, has passed the House almost unanimously. The amendment provides that from and after 1858 the House of Representatives shall consist of two hundred and forty members only, and that Counties shall be districted for the choice of members, not on population, but on the basis predicated on the number of legal voters. This amendment bids fair during the next year to become a part of our State Constitution.

Our advices from England to the moment of my writing, are up to the 29th ult. The difficulty reported to have presented themselves in the Peace Conferences are understood to have been removed, and it is confidently expected that the treaty of peace would be signed in a few days. One item of news, pleasing to the industrial class here, is, that breadstuffs were undergoing in price a great and general decline.

Among the outbreaks from Washington within a few days, it is said to be true that the French and English squadrons contemplate interfering in the Central American war, if the assertion of a distinguished foreign minister who ought to know, is to be believed. Other intimations at Washington remain quiet. The omens of success of the Democratic party at the next presidential election brighten every day. There is no harmony among the opposition, and the breach grows wider every day. No national party ever succeeded that made abolitionism an issue. It has killed every political party that ever come into the field for the presidential contest in advance. The masses of the people North and South are Unionists and the agitation of the Slavery question at the ballot boxes, savors in the public mind of nullification.

The Democratic party next fall will place themselves on the rock of the Federal Constitution: knowing no North or South—and leaving slavery where Washington, and Jefferson, and Jackson left it, to be regulated by the community where it exists. The recent elections in New Hampshire and Connecticut, though nominally carried by the American party, (many of whose principles are really good) indicate by the popular vote, clearly how they will go in November next, for the Democratic nominee. Two hundred electoral votes may be set down for the Democratic ticket next November!!! NEMO.

NORFOLK SS.
A Justice Court held before ELIJAH F. HALL, Esq., a Justice of the Peace within and for the County of Norfolk, aforesaid, at his office in Weymouth in said County, on the fifth day of April, A. D. 1856.

Nathaniel White of Quincy, in said County, Lumber Dealer, plaintiff, against Garrett Madigan of said Quincy, Laborer, defendant, and Weymouth and Braintree Mutual Fire Insurance Company, trustee.

This is an action of contract to recover thirty dollars and seventy-four cents, alleged to be due the plaintiff from the defendant on the eighth day of March, A. D. 1856, as set forth in the plaintiff's writ of that date.

And it appearing to the Court by the suggestion of the plaintiff and on inspection of the officer's return on the plaintiff's writ, that the defendant is not an inhabitant of this Commonwealth, nor a resident therein at the time of the service of said writ, and that he has no last and usual place of abode, agent or attorney in this Commonwealth known to the plaintiff or to said officer; and that no personal service of said writ has been made upon the defendant:

It is ordered by the Court, here, that the plaintiff give notice to the defendant of the pendency of this action and notify him to appear at a Justice's Court to be held before said Justice at his office in Weymouth, aforesaid, on SATURDAY, the fourteenth day of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, by causing a true and attested copy of this order to be published in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in said Quincy, once in a week, three weeks successively, the last publication thereof to be at least thirty days before said fourteenth day of June.

Poetry.

Human Life.

Human lives are river courses,
Running to one common sea,
Varying in their size and sources,
Landscapes and rapids.

Some, boil up on craggy mountains,
And go madly down their sides;
Others, fed by summer fountains,
Mirror meadows in their tide.

Here, a silver brook winds errant
Through the flowers and fragrant grass:
There, a slow and slimy current Threads the frowning wilderness.

Human griefs are shadows, gliding
Where the deepest waters gleam,
When the autumn clouds are riding
High above the sullen stream.

Human joys are sunny billows,
Sporting by a garden side,
Where no yews or weeping willows
Rustle o'er the smiling tide.

Onward, stately onward flowing,
Onward to that shoreless sea:
River, brook and torrent meeting
In one calm eternity!

The Stars are with the Voyager.

The stars are with the voyager
Wherever he may sail;
The moon is constant to her time;
The sun will never fail;
But follow, follow round the world,
The green earth and the sea;
So love is with the lover's heart,
Wherever he may be.

Wherever he may be, the stars
Must daily lose their light;
The moon will veil her in the shade;
The sun will set at night.
The sun may set but constant love
Will shine when he's away;
So that dull night is never night,
And day is brighter day.

A Night Thought.

How oft a cloud with evanescent veil,
Obscures your bashful light,
Which seems so modestly to steal
Along the waste of night!

'Tis thus the world's obtrusive wrongs Obscure with malice keen,
Some timid heart, which only longs
To live and die unseen.

Anecdotes.

A mother admonishing her son, a lad some seven years of age, told him that he should never defer till to-morrow what he could do to-day.

The little urchin replied: "Then, let's eat the rest of the plum pudding to-night!"

"Sambo, you've learned the law; can you say, if de devil was to lose him tail, whar would he go to find another one?"

"Why, to de grocery, ob course, you ignorant nigger—ants de only place I knows on whar dey rest tail bud spirits."

A distinguished gentleman, whose nose and chin were both very long, and who had lost his teeth, whereby the nose and chin were brought near together, was told—

"I am afraid your nose and chin will fight ere long, they approach each other very menacingly."

"I am afraid of it, myself, for a great many words have past between them already," replied the gentleman.

"Where was I, ma," said a little urchin to his mother, as he stood gazing upon his drunken and prostrated father, "where was I when you married pa? Why didn't you take me along, I could have picked out a better man than he is!"

A gentleman who courted a lady by the name of Miss Loyd, suddenly left her for one whose name was Take.

After being married to her, he was accosted by an acquaintance with,

"So I hear you are married to Miss Loyd, hey?"

"Indeed," answered he, "it was a Miss Take, I assure you, sir."

An Irishman called at an printing office with an advertisement, and, like a prudent man, inquired what it would cost. He was informed that for one insertion the price would be two dollars; subsequent insertions seventy-five cents each.

"An faith," said he, "I'll only have two subsequent insertions!"

"I have lost my appetite," said a gigantic gentleman, and an eminent performer on the trencher to Mark Supple.

"I hope," said Supple, "no poor man has found it, for it would ruin him in a week."

"Excuse me, madam, I would like to ask why you look at me so very savagely?"

"Oh! I beg pardon, sir! I took you for my husband."

MONUMENTS,
Grave Stones, Tablets, &c.

McGrath, Mitchell & Co.,
RESPECTFULLY invite attention to this establishment, now opened near the South Quincy Depot—where MONUMENTAL work of every description, from the simplest Grave Stone or Tablet to the most elegant and elaborate Monument is executed in the very best style.

Long experience in the business, and a thorough comprehension in the Art of Designing, enables the Conductors of these works to carry out the ideas and suit the various tastes and requirements of persons in need of such articles.

GRANITE WORK,

—in all its forms—
FRONTS FOR BUILDINGS,
MONUMENTS, STEPS,
TOMB FRONTS, FENCE POSTS,
Underpinning, Cellar Stones, &c., &c., furnished to order, by

C. R. & C. Mitchell.
A large collection of Monumental Designs, (all drawn in the Establishment,) and which, as well as the work, attest the skill and competency of the Proprietors, are on hand, and the public are respectfully invited to call and inspect them.

For a Fort Stomach, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills
at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity
and strength is restored to the system.

For NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA,
Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do.
These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

For SCURF, RHEUMATISM, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, until the eruptions disappear. The eruptions will soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate
the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health.

Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because "it system wants cleansing."

To PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as they the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious
Affections arise from some derangement—either
torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver.
Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which carries the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhea, prevails.
Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness;
sometimes there is severe pain in the side, the skin
and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow;
the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch;
the whole system irritates, with a tendency to vomiting, and turns to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhea, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in small doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DYSURIC Pill, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effective to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

AYER'S

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease.
An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth.
Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

For COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of Piles, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under an active habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

For DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will form the most agreeable, safe, and powerful remedy for the heartburn, bodyburn, and sourness of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a FORT STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills
at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity
and strength is restored to the system.

For NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA,
Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do.
These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

W. STONE'S VEGETABLE LIQUID CATHARTIC

MILY PHYSIC

THE most important discovery ever made in Medical Science, being a compound of Roots which form the most powerful, agreeable physic ever offered to the public. The necessity of such a medicine has long been felt by the heads of families and physicians. Its advantages over cathartics given in the Pills or Powders, must be obvious to every one. It operates more immediately on the system, and at the same time is less difficult to administer, being agreeable to the taste. It not only cures the various diseases where physic is required, but habitual constipation, leaving the bowels dry. It expels all humors from the system, and cures the various diseases of the liver, frees the stomach from biliousness, restores the whole system, and removes the cause of all local pains such as may also be relied upon in all diseases of the—DYSPEPSIA, HEMORRHOIDS, AND LIVER MORBIDITY, yield at once to its influence. Again we repeat, TRY IT!—it is the most important recommendation. No family will be without it after they have properly tested its efficacy. Reader, if you have tried other remedies without success, despair not—relief is now at hand. Are you suffering from Scirrhus, six bottles of this Liquid Cathartic will cure you. Would be relieved from habitual constipation, three bottles will effect all that you desire. If you are afflicted with Rheumatism, Neuralgia, or other local pains, two bottles will free you from them. Names will be eradicated from the files by the use of one to six bottles. In short, if you require a physic for any purpose, this is the most reliable, safe, and agreeable to the taste that has been placed within the reach of the public.

The Old Mother.

Not long since, a good-looking man, in middle life, came to our door asking for 'the minister.' When informed that he was out of town, he seemed disappointed and anxious. On being questioned as to his business, he replied: 'I have lost my mother, and as this place used to be her home, and my father lies here, we have come to lay her beside him.'

Our hearts rose in sympathy, and we said, 'You have met with a great loss.'

'Well—yes,' replied the strong man, with hesitancy, 'a mother is a great loss in general; but our mother had outlived her usefulness; she was in her second childhood, and her mind was grown as weak as her body, so that she was no comfort to herself, and was a burden to everybody. There were seven of us, sons and daughters; and as we could not find any one that was willing to board her, we agreed to keep her among us a year about. But I have had more than my share of her, for she was too feeble to be moved when my time was out; and that was more than three months before her death. But then she was a good mother in her day, and toiled very hard to bring us all up.'

Without looking at the face of the heartless man, we directed him to the house of the neighboring pastor, and returned to our nursery. We gazed on the merry little faces which smiled or grew sad in imitation of ours—those little ones to whose ear no word in our language is half so sweet as 'Mother'; and we wondered if that day would ever come when they would say of us, 'She had outlived her usefulness—she is no comfort to herself and a burden to everybody else'; and we hope that before such a day would dawn, we might be taken to rest. God forbid that we should outlive the love of our children! Rather let us die while our hearts are a part of their own, that our grave may be watered with their tears, and our love linked with their hopes of heaven.

When the bell tolled for the mother's burial we went to the sanctuary to pay our only token of respect for the aged stranger; for we felt that we could give her memory a rest, even though her children had none to shed.

'She was a good mother in her day, and toiled hard to bring us all up—she was no comfort to herself, and a burden to everybody else!' These cruel, heartless words rang in our ears as we saw the coffin borne up the aisle. The bell tolled long and loud, until its iron tongue had chronicled the years of the toll mother. One—two—three—four—five. How clearly and how merrily each stroke told of her once peaceful slumber in her mother's bosom, and of her seat at night-fall on her weary father's knees. Six—seven—eight—nine—ten rang out the tale of her sports upon the green sward, in the meadow and by the brook. Eleven—twelve—thirteen—fourteen—fifteen spoke more gravely of school days, and little household joys and cares. Sixteen—seventeen—eighteen sounded out the enraptured visions of maidenhood, and the dream of early love. Nineteen brought before us the happy bride. Twenty spoke of the young mother whose heart was full to bursting with the new strength love which God had awakened in her bosom. And then stroke after stroke told of her early womanhood, of the love and cares, and hopes and fears and toils through which she passed during these years, till fifty rang out harsh and loud. From that to sixty each stroke told of the warm-hearted mother and grandmother, living over again her own joys and sorrows in those of her children and children's children. Every family of all the group wanted grandmother then, and the only strife was who should secure the prize; but hark! the bell tolls on! Seventy-one—two—three—four. She begins to grow feeble, requires some care, is not altogether perfectly patient or satisfied; she goes from one child's house to another, so that no one place seems like home. She murmurs in plaintive tones, and after all her toil and weariness, it is hard she cannot be allowed a home to die in; that she must end sent rather than invited, from house to house. Eighty-one—two—three—four, ah, she is now a second child, now 'she has outlived her usefulness, she has now ceased to be a comfort to herself or anybody; that is, she has ceased to be profitable to her earth-craving and money-grasping children.

Now sounds out, reverberating through our lovely forest, and echoing back from our 'hill of the dead.' Eighty-nine! there she now lies in the coffin, cold and still; she makes no trouble now, demands no love, no soft words, no tender little offices. A look of patient endurance, we fancied also an expression of grief for unrequited love, sat on her marble features. Her children were there, clad in weeds of woe, and in an irony we remembered the strong man words, 'She was a good mother in her day.'

When the bell ceased tolling, the strange minister rose in the pulpit. His from was very erect, and his voice strong, but his hair was silvery white. He read several passages of Scripture expressive of God's compassion to feeble man, and especially of his tenderness when gray hairs are on him, and his strength fails. He then made some touching remarks on human frailty, and of dependence on God, their Master while in health, that they might claim his promises when heart and flesh should fail them. 'Then,' he said, 'the eternal God, shall be thy refuge, and beneath thee shall be the everlasting arms. Leaning over the desk and gazing on the coffin form before him, he then said reverently, 'From a little child I have honored the aged; but never till my gray hairs covered my own head, did I know truly how much love and sympathy this class has a right to demand of their fellow creatures. Now I feel it. Our mother,' he added most tenderly, 'who now lies in death before us, was a stranger to me, as are all these her descendants. All I know of her is what her son has told me to-day; that she was brought to this town from afar; sixty-nine years ago, a happy bride; that here she has passed the most of her life, toiling as only mothers have ever strength to toil, until she had reared a large family of sons and daughters; that she left her home here, clad in the weeds of widowhood, to dwell among her children; and that till health and vigor left her, she lived for you, her descendants.'

You, who together have shared her love and her care, know how well you have requited her. God forbid that conscience should accuse any of you of ingratitude or murmuring, on account of the care she has been to you of late. When you go back to your homes, be careful of your words and your example before your own children, for the fruit of your own doing you will surely reap from them when you yourselves totter on the brink of the grave. I entreat you as a friend, as one who has himself entered the 'evening of life,' that you may never say, in the presence of your family nor of Heaven, 'Our mother has outlived her usefulness, she was a burden to us.' Never, never; a mother cannot live so long as that! No; when she can no longer labor for her children, nor yet care for herself, she can fall like a precious weight on their bosoms and call forth by her helplessness all the noble, generous feelings of their natures.

Adieu then, poor toll-worn mother; there are no more sleepless nights, no more days of pain for thee. Undying vigor and everlasting usefulness are a part of the inheritance of the redeemed. Feeble as thou wert on earth; thou wilt be no burden on the bosom of Infinite Love, but there shalt thou find thy longed for rest and receive glorious sympathy from Jesus and his ransomed fold.—Examiner.

Impertinent Meddlers.

Of all the annoyances in this annoying world, there are none quite so provoking as the impertinent, gossiping curiosity which besets a man on every hand, which prides into his habits, inquires closely into his business, questions him concerning his family, discusses with him the propriety of this or that act, gives advice unasked or undesired as to the course he shall pursue in given cases and finally undertakes the exercise of a general supervision over a man's family, business, friends, amusements and actions.

It will not be denied, we think, that every circle, however limited, contains one or more of these impertinently curious and pestilent bores. Paul Pry was the type of a prolific class. The race of busy-bodies is as numerous as the tribes that can claim consanguinity with the universal Smith family, with all the Jones's, Brown's and Jenkins's thrown in. They pervade every rank. The saloons of the wealthy, the dwellings of the middling class and the abodes of the poor, alike swarm with them. They are as numerous as the mosquito in mid-summer and quite as troublesome. They make merchandise of every other man's private affairs and are never so agreeably employed as when neglecting their own concerns for the friendly purpose of poking their noses into the concerns of their neighbors; they even prey upon each other.

It may be that these unscrupulous and officious bores are permitted to exist for some wise purpose in the economy of Providence, as the locusts were sent upon the Egyptians, and Job's friends were permitted to comfort him after their fashion. They stick to one like a burr. They follow the rich man like a shadow, and cleave to the poor like a poor man's plaster. They scan a friend's faults with a microscopic eye, and look at his virtues through an inverted telescope. They are leeches, which cannot be thrown off until they have sucked the blood dry, and have exhausted the largest stock of patience.

One of the most singular and remarkable characteristics of the whole tribe of busy bodies is their beetle headedness; they are not made of penetrable stuff. You may insult and scorn them, but, secure in their sublime self-assurance, they see it not, they do not feel it. With all the conceit of wisdom that ever lodged in the heart of vanity itself, they are blind, dull fools who will not see their folly, and they who make an effort to them will find that 'though they shouldst bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.'

Go where you will the busy body is there with us; do what we will the busy body has his finger in the pie before you know it; say what you will, the busy body has his tongue wagging in chorus, with variations to suit all tastes. If we are engaged in the most important transactions of life, he is at our elbow, with his everlasting buzz, or if we are buying the smallest article to meet our wants, he is with us to know the object of our purchase and whether we could not have bought it cheaper.

We have in our mind several distinct specimens of this class, whose peculiar habits and manners with their friends, we shall attempt to portray in another article, not as examples to be followed, but to be shunned. We hold them up as beacons to the rising generation, that the course which has made them intolerable nuisances may be avoided. If in this way we can make them useful in some slight degree, by inspiring disgust and an earnest desire not to be degraded to their condition in the scale of existence, we shall, we think, have achieved an important and praiseworthy result.—Boston Herald.

Curious Historical Items.

On looking over a copy of Rev. Charles Brooks's recently published History of Medford, we found much entertaining information in regard to the quaint customs of the early settlers of this part of the country. Mr. Brooks has done a good service in rescuing from oblivion these characteristic records. We condense from this work the following:

Discovery of Spot Pond. On the 7th of February, 1632, says the record, 'Governor Winthrop, Mr. Nowell and others, crossed our ford in Medford, and traveled on an exploring expedition to the north-east, and came to a very large pond, having in the midst an island of about one acre, and very thick with trees of pine and beech; and the pond had divers small rocks standing up here and there, in it, which they therefore called Spot Pond. They went all about it on the ice.' The circumstances which give a name to this fine sheet of water, was an odd one, certainly. The name has the merit of brevity.

Stringent License Law. On the 2d of July, 1633, it was ordered that 'no person sell either wine or strong water without leave from the Governor or Deputy Governor; and no man shall give any strong water to an Indian.'

The Trade in Buns. Nov. 20, 1637, it was 'ordered, that no person shall sell any cake or buns, either in the market, or victualling houses, or elsewhere, upon pain of 10s fine.' Cakes for funerals and marriages were exempted. Pea nuts are not mentioned. The colonists, probably, had not learned to indulge in that luxury, or else, as now, the legislators considered them too sweet a morsel to put under ban.

An Unambitious Politician. In 1613, Mr. Edward Collins was chosen by Cambridge a representative to the General Court; but he did not attend, and was required to give reasons for his neglect or pay a fine of twenty shillings. He has no imitators in this fast generation.

A Damper on Lovers. Nov. 11, 1647, it was ordered that 'no lover shall seek the hand of his chosen one till he has asked permission of her parents. Penalty for the first offence, £5, for the second, £10, and for the third, imprisonment.' Rather hard lines for the 'boys.'

Chips of the Old Block. Some Indian children brought up in English families afterwards became idle and intemperate. A gentleman asked the Indian father why this was so, and he answered—'Tucks will be tucks, for all old men be hatch em.'

Wages. In 1712, a day laborer in Medford was allowed two shillings; for a team, one day, five shillings.

Earthquake. On Sunday, Oct. 20, 1737, the great earthquake occurred, and the selectmen appointed a day of fasting and humiliation in consequence.

Rough Joiners. In September, 1729, it was voted to prosecute those who had cut the seats of the new meeting-house. Jackknives were the offending instruments.

School Boy Literature. In 1750 a gallows and whipping post stood near Porter's tavern, in Cambridge, which gave rise to the following:

'Cambridge is a famous town,
Both for wit and knowledge;
Some they whip, and some they hang,
And some they send to college.'

Indian Repartee. A clergyman said to an Indian, 'I am sorry to see you drink rum.' The Indian replied, 'Yes we Indians do drink rum, but we do not make it.'

Revolutionary Reminiscence. Before the battle of Bunker Hill, Gen. Stark made his headquarters at Medford, in the house built by Jonathan Wade, near the Medford House, on the east side of the street. After the battle twenty-five of the General's men, who had been killed, were brought here and buried in the field, about fifty or sixty rods north of Gravelly bridge. Their bones have been discovered recently. Major Andrew Mc Clary of Stark's regiment, was buried in this town. His remains lie about sixty rods north of the old burying ground.

Bean-feast. In 1776, 'Aunt Jenny' Watts, of Medford, carried baked pudding and beans, on horseback, in market baskets, to Cambridge College twice each week, and would retail her load only to under-graduates! She sold the best of articles, at the lowest prices, and was almost overwhelmed with customers. She said she was the benefactor of the college, and had no desire to make the young men mealy-mouthed or pudding-headed.

Omnibuses. In 1836 appeared the omnibus 'Governor Brooks,' said to be the first one built in New England. It was built by Osgood Bradley of Worcester, and cost six hundred and fifty dollars. It was owned and driven by Mr. Joseph Wyman, of Medford, who began his business in 1805, and for thirty years drove a public coach between Medford and Boston, without overturning it.

Jew-diad. In 1725, Abraham Touro, an eminent Jew, residing in Medford, while standing in his chaise witnessing the entry of Lafayette into Boston, was thrown out by a sudden start of his horse, and broke his leg. It became necessary to amputate it, but with a Jew's traditional prejudice against that operation, he exclaimed, 'No! I will never go into heaven with one leg.'

Personal. Capt. Duncan Ingraham, married a medford lady, and resided in the town. His grandson, Duncan N., attended the public schools there, and is remembered as a boy of spirit and force. He has since rendered himself famous by his bold measures at Smyrna for the rescue of Kostza, the Hungarian.—Boston Journal.

Facts upon Eyes and Ears.

The organ of vision is considered the most delicate organization in the human frame, yet many who have been born blind have been enabled to see by surgical operation, and the following is an interesting fact concerning one of the class. This youth had become thirteen years of age when his eyes were couched by a surgeon. He thought scarlet the most beautiful color; black was painful. He fancied every object touched him; and he could not distinguish by sight what he perfectly knew by feeling; for instance, the cat and the dog. When his second eye was couched he remarked that the objects were not so large in appearance to this, as to the one opened at first. Pictures he considered only parti colored surfaces, and a miniature absolutely astonished him, seeming to him like putting a bushel into a pint.

Stanley, the organist, and many blind musicians, have been the best performers of their time; and a school-mistress in England, could discover that two boys were playing in a distant corner of the room instead of studying, although a person using his eyes could not detect the slightest sound. Professor Sanderson, who was blind, could in a few moments, tell how many persons were in a mixed company, and of each sex. A blind French lady could dance in figure dances, sew, and thread her own needle. A blind man in Derbyshire, England, has actually been a surveyor and planner of roads, his ear guiding him as to distance as accurately as the eye to others; and the late Justice Fielding who was blind, on walking into a room for the first time, after speaking a few words, said, 'This room is about twenty-two feet long, eighteen wide, and twelve high,' all of which was revealed to him with accuracy through the medium of his ear. Verily, 'We are fearfully and wonderfully made.'

Things not in Order

1. To stand before the Church door before service.
2. To engage in any kind of conversation, even religious, between the time of your going in and the commencement of worship. That interval should be spent in composing the thoughts for the solemnities of the approaching services.
3. To salute persons coming in by bowing, smiling, &c.
4. To look around to catch the eye of a friend, and smiling at any remark from the pulpit.
5. To permit your children to sit in any place except your own pew.
6. To allow them to be stuffing themselves all the time with apples, sweet cakes, candy, or any thing else.
7. Sleeping in Church.
8. To be reaching for garments, or adjusting the dress, while the blessing is pronounced.
9. To commence laughing, talking, and saluting one another as soon as the people are dismissed.
10. To stand in the door or aisle, and detain others getting out.
11. To stand around the door, gazing at the ladies as they leave the church, to see who escorts them, and many other things which are little concern others.
12. To read these items and not endeavor to correct them.—Cong. Journal.

Mass Temperance Meeting.

The Norfolk County Temperance Society, per previous notice, held their Convention in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Port Norfolk, Dorchester, Fast Day afternoon and evening. The Convention organized with Rev. Edwin Thompson of Walpole, in the chair. After prayer by Rev. Charles W. Dennison, in the absence of the Secretary, the Convention nominated and elected H. Clay, Secretary for the day. During the afternoon the Convention was addressed in an able manner by the President, Rev. Edwin Thompson, Rev. Charles W. Dennison, of Boston, Rev. Daniel Steele, Rev. B. W. Burrows, James Dorr, Esp. Patrick Collins of Dorchester, Mr. Jameson, President of the Boston Franklin Total Abstinence Society, and Mr. Waterhouse of Boston. The several speakers were listened to by an attentive and respectful audience, who manifested the utmost satisfaction, thus showing that they are deeply in the great cause of Temperance.

At six o'clock the Convention adjourned, to meet again at seven o'clock in the evening. At half past six, the friends began to assemble; and at the appointed hour, the President took the chair, and after a very impressive prayer by Rev. Father Tucker of Quincy, the President took the floor and proceeded to address the Convention in an able and acceptable manner; after which the Rev. Mr. Fisher of Dedham was introduced, who addressed the Convention for an hour with great eloquence and power.

The Convention was under great obligation to Mr. and Mrs. Wild, Miss Davis and Mr. Tucker, who enlivened its proceedings with the most admirable singing; and also to Mr. Arthur Hayter of Dorchester, who presided at the organ in a manner in which the Hayters only can preside. This was one of the most successful Temperance meetings which has been held in the town for years, showing conclusively that the people of this good old town are awake to the importance of carrying forward the great and glorious cause of temperance. In conclusion, the earnestness with which the pledge was signed by many present who had not before availed themselves of the opportunity, must be acknowledged as an enchanting scene.

It was then voted, that the proceedings of this Convention be published in the Boston Daily Bee, Boston Evening Telegraph, Dedham Gazette, and Quincy Patriot.

The Convention closed by singing Old Hundred.

H. CLAY, Secretary pro tem.

Minnesota Correspondence.

ON BOARD THE STEAMER METROPOLITAN.

FRIEND GREEN: I promised in my last to give you the present and future of Winona, in my next, but circumstances will not permit at present.

You know that I arrived in Quincy about the same time my letter did, a circumstance, 'very like me,' (some may say,) but of little note considering where I am now and my future wanderings.

I had hardly landed in Winona, when business demanded I should go to St. Louis, where I am now going. High winds just now prevent us running, therefore we are 'tied up' at Camanche, on the Iowa side, eight miles below Lyons. These are the first leisure moments I have had since my arrival home, and I improve them in writing to my many friends.

I had a long and tiresome trip from Quincy to Winona, but I was well paid for it mentally and pecuniarily speaking. I received no cold welcome, but many was the hearty shake of the hand, and kind words for my speedy and safe return. Winona is doubly dear to me. In all my wanderings, she ranks first of all the river towns from Dubuque to St. Paul. Her people in intelligence will compare favorably with any Eastern town. Her back country, her valleys leading to it; her trout brooks, her castle bluffs, her tremulous hills, are features unequalled in magnificence in the valley of the 'Father of Waters.' If Winona is not a magnificent location, if she is not destined to be a large city, then nature is false, and I am no prophet.

Navigation is opened to Lake Pepin. The first boat up was the Alhambra, (the 7th.) Western travel has commenced and floods of emigrants and visitors are pouring in from all quarters; two-thirds come to the Mississippi before they know their real destination. The hotels west of Chicago, and in that great town, are crowded to their utmost capacity. The Galena road is doing a stupendous business; the boats running in connection up river, are loaded down to their guards, and they look like a floating mass of human beings.

I never wrote upon the West, but my pen stops at the thought of the future destiny of this country. To see so many of the people from foreign countries; to see the fire and energy of the American people, their indomitable perseverance, their Yankee ingenuity. Then this valley of the Mississippi, its boundless prairies, vast pineries and mineral lands; what a field for thought—labor—the arts and sciences.

Certainly we have with our intelligence, an incomparable foundation; and if we remain true to learning and the doctrines of the founders of this great Republic, all other nations will sink into insignificance in comparison, and must sooner or later bow in humble reverence to our laws and institutions.

In my humble opinion, if the North would expend as much time and money in advancing schools of learning throughout the West, they would do more towards blotting out of existence slavery, than in the present mode of warfare. Although 'all talk,' Kansas is the natural battle field, either by words or arms, that is to decide the extension of slavery, and already the word has gone forth, that 'Kansas is free.' Who that considers with a cool and careful mind, the geographical position of Missouri, the real character of her people, and her monied interest, (that mighty power) but what says she, too, must be freed from the damning influence of slavery. Let us forgive her, her past sins, and trust to the good sense and intelligence of her people. Those that are flocking there from the free states, should remember and keep at heart the principles they advocated at home, or they too, in their last for gain, may be contaminated with the same crime of holding their fellow men in bondage.

Money is power, and be it in goods, chattels, slaves, or any thing else, that a man has, he is bound to defend them unto death; and nine out of ten, wherever they be, use it more for selfish purposes than they do for alleviating the wrongs of society and suffering humanity. How many are there among the Christians of the North, if they have property, got honestly or dishonestly, would not fight with those who were going to take it from them, either directly or indirectly.

I know the disposition of the Yankee too well to be mistaken in them; their motto is, 'Get money,—get it honestly if you can but get it.' It would be well therefore, for those who live in glass houses to be careful how they throw stones.

Wrongs exist in all nations, but the greatest wrong among any people, is that of intelligent men advocating the use of fire arms to suppress a few hirelings, who may perhaps have committed some trifling offence, such as occur on almost every election day throughout the West. Enough time and money has been foolishly spent in this matter to have built est way of making it a Free State. I have never been into a slave state, but expect to be soon, where I shall probably learn whether there is any difference between a Northern man who wishes to make a portion of our adopted citizens slaves, and a plantation negro driver.

I am satisfied that the slavery of the South is not the worst slavery to fear in this country. Go East if you wish to see the slavery that is most to be dreaded. Slaves of the mind and body. Slaves to sensual passions and corrupting fashions. Do you know the misery and distress caused by drinking and gambling, even in your neighborhood? Do you know the numbers of young men and women who come to an untimely end by dissipation. They are legends. I trust you will use your influence hereafter, in persuading young men who wish to become healthy, moral and wise, to pick up their traps and start for a farm in the West.

Good bye. Yours truly,

J. W.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, April 26th, 1856.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

ORGANIZATION. At a meeting of Stockholders, the following gentlemen were chosen Directors of the Quincy Fire and Marine Insurance Company.

Stephen Bates, A. W. Perrin, Gideon F. Thayer, F. M. Johnson, Wm. D. Ticknor, Louis Congdon, Wm. S. Thaxter, Albert Thompson and Wm. P. Draper.

At a meeting of the Directors, the following Officers were elected.

President—Gideon F. Thayer.
Vice President—Stephen Bates.
Secretary—Franklin Greene, Jr.

The Public have the guarantee from the well known probity and business tact of its officers, the permanent success of this institution. In its head, Gideon F. Thayer, we recognize the careful, honest and strict disciplinarian in business matters, which eminently qualifies him for this important trust.

RAILROAD TIME. We would call the attention of our readers to the change in the time of running of the cars, which takes place on and after Monday next, April 26th.

TOWN HALL CLOTHING STORE. Messrs. Russell & Co. have opened their spring business in a manner to meet the wishes of all our cash-paying citizens who may be in want of clothing. They have the facilities of furnishing a garment of the very best materials, a neat fit, with "short stitches and many of them," at prices not to be equalled. Surely, a few such energetic firms would drive nakedness out of the world. Give them a call. See advertisement in another column.

BOSTON DENTISTRY. It is a conceded point, that no city in the world excels Boston in the skill of its Dental Surgeons. The stranger who traverses the city will be struck with the high position they hold, but nowhere will they find this art in higher perfection, than if, arrested by a curious anatomical exhibition of the progress of dentition to be seen in an elegant show case at 25 Tremont Row, opposite the Boston Museum, he ascends to the rooms of Drs. CUMMINGS & FLAGG. The Doctors are always ready to give the latest improvements in the best style, with betterments of their own. Their mode of setting teeth, single or in sets, on the principle of atmospheric suction, without hooks or any dependence whatever in remaining teeth or stumps, is essentially their own and eminently successful.

The power of any man to do things in the right way, is always discovered by the public sooner or later, and accordingly the public has discovered Drs. Cummings & Flagg to be the first practical dentists of the city of dentists, and are carrying their work to every dinner-table in Christendom.—Boston Journal.

THE UNION QUINCY TEMPERANCE SOCIETY. The Meeting of this Society on Thursday Evening last at the Lyceum Room, was numerously attended, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. This Society now numbers rising of seven hundred members (with a daily increase) who have signed the pledge, and given the assurance, that individually and collectively, they will use their influence to discountenance the too frequent use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. We shall always experience a pleasure, while discharging our duty, in noticing the progress of this infant Society in the work of moral reform.

D. D. RINGS' CLOTHING EMPORIUM.—It will be seen by reference to another column, that Mr. Ring is now prepared to meet all the wants of his numerous customers at his fashionable establishment. From a personal examination of his spring importations, we noticed some beautiful patterns, which, if converted into garments by the dexterous skill of Mr. R. we are sure could not fail to please even the most fastidious. But his business reputation requires no eulogy from our hands; his numerous friends have ample testimony of his ability to perform all he has promised. Give him a call.

For the Patriot.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, April 24th, 1856.

European Peace.—Reflections.—Erecting Runners from Washington.—Speeches in the Senate.—The Presidency.—Legislative Matters.—New Insurance Office in Quincy.—Dorchester School Committee.—Doctor O. Putnam Bacon.

Peace is at last restored in Europe; although the conditions of the Treaty signed at Paris, are not, as yet, clearly known. Great Britain has expended two hundred millions of pounds sterling by the Russian war, and won no territory or laurels. Her national debt is increased one billion of dollars more. The recent war in Europe, has done nothing for the cause of freedom or humanity, but on the contrary, concentrated monarchical power. England's alliance with France in the war with Russia, was most unfortunate for her glory and for liberty. The British Lion did not go forth to battle, and sacrifice blood and treasure to meliorate the condition of Turkey, or kindle one spark for human rights; but to strengthen the dynasty of that despot, Louis Napoleon, and build up in France the fabric of an absolute monarchy. It has been a war for power, and not for the cause of freedom. Had Great Britain in her difficulties with Russia, renounced all alliance with France, but sympathized with Poland, Hungary and Italy, and called these oppressed but patriotic people to her aid, she would have planted in the very heart of Europe, a fertilizing spirit of liberty, that would have spread over and liberalized the whole continent. Kossuth in the field, with his burning eloquence, despotism would have been overthrown, and England by espousing the cause of humanity, would have raised herself to the highest pitch of grandeur, since the days of Queen Elizabeth. Settled on the basis of an "Holy Alliance," peace cannot continue long in Europe. The next struggle will be for national freedom.

Our difficulties with England, particularly in regard to British enlistment matters, are as far as ever being amicably adjusted. No adequate or acceptable apology for the conduct of her officials for the infringement of our laws has been made, and we learn from Washington to day, that it is positively certain that Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, will be immediately dismissed in case he be not recalled, lest what may be the consequences. A dismissal of a foreign minister is always a cause for war.

Eloquent speeches have been recently made in the United States Senate by Messrs. Seward, Sumner, and Harlan, on the Bill for the admission of Kansas. Seward's Speech in particular was a great effort, and places him in the foremost ranks of American Statesmen. Mr. Clay of Alabama, replied to these speeches on Monday last. He complimented General Pierce for his course regarding Kansas matters; for the firmness and consistency he had exhibited in maintaining the rights of the entire country. The President he said had been abused by abolitionists and Southern Americans on exactly contrary grounds. He had displeased the extremists on both sides, by occupying middle ground and pursuing a course consistent with the rights of the North and South.

We are looking with some anxiety to the result of the National Democratic Convention, to be held in Cincinnati. The New York Tribune predicts trouble in the camp, and that the nomination will result in some form hardly named by the Democratic party. Whoever may be the nominee he will live or be chosen. The star of Mr. Buchanan is at the present moment in the ascendancy on the Presidential question, but it may not continue so, and if the two-third rule is adopted in the Convention his chance is not good.

Since my last, matters have progressed business-like at the State House. The Bill for the annexation of a part of Brantree to Quincy, has passed both Houses, and will soon become a law. Chelsea is to be annexed to Boston if the voters of both places consent. In the State Senate on Monday, the majority and minority Reports on the Liquor Law was taken from the table and placed in the orders of the day. So look out bye and bye for a display of eloquence on this matter. The majority Report goes for the present law; the minority Report for a license system. There will be found but few open advocates for a license system.—The whole matter has since been indefinitely postponed.

A bill was reported from the Committee on Mercantile Affairs, in addition to several acts for the relief of insolvent debtors, &c., establishing Courts of Insolvency in each county. Each Judge, by this act, may appoint Registers of Insolvency to hold office five years, the salaries of the judges to be as follows:

Suffolk $3000 per annum; Middlesex, Essex, and Worcester, each $2000; Plymouth Bristol and Barnstable, $1600; Dukes and Nantucket $600; Berkshire $1410; Norfolk $2000; Hampden $1100; Hampshire and Franklin $1000 The salaries of the Registers range from $3000 for Suffolk County to $450 for Dukes and Nantucket. The remaining sections (forty-one in the bill) relate mainly to proceedings in Court.

I perceive by your last week's Patriot, an advertisement of the Quincy Fire and Marine Insurance Company, recently established simultaneously at Quincy and Boston. The worthy and upright President of the office, for a long time has been the Nestor of New England teachers. With Gideon F. Thayer, Esq., at its head, the office commences its legitimate business under favorable auspices. It differs from Mutual Insurance Companies by insuring on the Stock principle where no deposit note is given and no premium returned. The capital of $50,000 is all paid in and is an ample guaranty to all Policy holders. May Mr. Thayer be as successful in his new calling, as he has been useful and honored in the vocation of instructor of youth.

The accomplished and witty editor of the Dorchester Mercury, has been rotated by party tactics, from the office of School Committee of Dorchester. A post which he held with honor for fourteen consecutive years. His editorial of the 12th instant, touching very modestly the matter, was beautifully written,—the offspring of his heart. No man living has done more in Norfolk County for the cause of elementary education than Dr. Bacon. As the Secretary of the Board of School Committee, he has indeed been diligent in every good work and word. He retires (we believe temporarily) carrying with him the pupils' love of the Dorchester Schools. NEMO.

APPOINTMENT. Our friend and fellow-townsmen, Albion K. P. Dearborn, we are pleased to learn has been externally cared for by Uncle Sam,—he now holds an office in the Boston Custom House. We like this. Mr. D. has always been a worthy, hard-working man, and reliable Democrat. He learnt his Democracy in the right school—the workshop. Such appointments shall always receive a favorable notice at our hands.

NEW PROVISION STORE. Sincerely do we congratulate our citizens upon the opening of a new Provision Store, at the stand long and well kept by the lamented Copeland. Alive to the wants of the public, and to their own interest, the brothers, C. & J. Arnold, favorably known for their probity and experience as dealers in produce, have taken this establishment, where they intend to keep constantly on hand and for sale, the very best the market affords,—and from samples we have seen of the choicest meats, vegetables, fruits, &c. there can scarcely be any doubt that every body can be well supplied, and the appetite of the epicure ever made glad and content.

Poetry.

Good Old Times.

I do respect the times of old—the times of
 When our old clever honest dads went whistling to their work;
 When old cock'd hats and breeches were the fashion of the day,
 And good thick bottomed shoes were worn with buckles shining gay!
 The times of old—the times of old—when our good mothers wore
 Good homespun stuffs—and kept their muffs and tippets evermore!
 When good stout waists were all the rage, and cheeks ne'er painted were
 And borrowed curls ne'er decked the girls with beauty debonair!
 The times of old—the good old times, when home brew'd beer went round
 The merry hearth: where boisterous mirth and apples did abound—
 When giggling maids would hang their heads in bashful modesty,
 And sprightly lads would eye their dads, and nudge them cosily!
 The good old times, when our old dads were fat and hearty too,
 With hair comb'd back most gracefully, and done up in a queue—
 I do respect those golden days, when fashion was inclin'd
 To make her votaries wear their coats with pockets holes behind!
 Alas! they've passed with time away—those halcyon days are o'er,
 And now men doat on green frock coats—with pocket holes before!
 The women, too, have taken the cue, and wear their chains of gold:
 O for the lads, like our dads, who lived in times of old.

True Brotherhood.

Come, brother man, let's do our best
 To smooth the rougher ways of life,
 Bid Envy, with her jaundiced eye,
 Avail; and grim, ignoble Strife
 Give place to true fraternity;
 And Discord, clamorous, depart;
 Let gentle, sweet-voiced Harmony
 Enfold us twain—aye, heart to heart.

Why should we strive together here,
 And worse than waste life's precious hours?
 Why sow each path with cruel thorns,
 When easier far to culture flowers?
 Why nurture fiery fronted Hate,
 When mild-eyed Love stands pining by?
 And burst through dark perdition's doors,
 When angels woo us to the sky?

The Insect Teacher.

"The spider takes hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces."—KING SOLOMON.

See! what with untiring skill,
 With an energy of will,
 All unaided,—all forlorn,
 Housewife's hate, and beauty's scorn,
 How the spider builds her bower
 High in halls of regal power.

Is the mission of thy care
 Made by wealth and state so fair,
 By Fortune's fearful sway,
 Laid in dust?—or left away?
 —Yield no thought to blank despair,
 Firm in faith, and strong in prayer,
 Rise! to the realm to repair.

For the Spider, harmless made,
 Hunted from each loved retreat,
 Not dejected, not afraid,
 Toiling thro' the gloomiest shade,
 Gathereth vigor from defeat:
 Child of Reason! deign to see
 What an insect teacheth thee.

Anecdotes.

"I say, boy, whose horse is that you're riding?"
 "Why, it's daddy's."
 "Who is your daddy?"
 "Don't yer know? why, uncle Peter Jones."
 "Why, yes, calculate I am. You see, dad got to be a widower, and married mother's sister, and now he's my uncle."

A Scotch boy had delivered a message to a lady, but did not seem in a hurry to go.
 Being asked if there was anything else that his mother had bid him say, Jock whimpered out:

"She said, I wasna to seek anything for comin', but if ye gied me I was to tak it."
 We need scarcely add that the hint was taken, and Jock's services were amply rewarded.

A lady once being very sorely afflicted with a disorder usually denominated hysterics, imagined she could not breathe, and appealed to her husband on the occasion, with,
 "Mr. — I can't breathe!"

"Well, my dear," returned the affectionate husband, "I would not try, for nobody wants you should."

"I hope you will be able to support me," said a young lady while walking out with her intended, during a slippery state of the sidewalks.

"Why, yes," said the somewhat hesitating swain; "with some little assistance from your father."
 "There was some confusion, and a profound silence.

A teacher had been explaining to a class the points of the compass, and all were drawn up in front, towards the north.

"Now, what is before you, John?"
 "The north, sir."
 "And what behind you, Tommy?"
 "My, coat-tail, sir; lying at the same time to get a glimpse of it."

"Jones, why what in the world put matrimony into your head?"
 "Well the fact is, Joe, I was short of shirts."

 tency in the Art of Designing, enables the Conductors of these works to carry out
 the ideas and suit the various tastes and requirements of persons in need of such articles.

FRONTS FOR BUILDINGS,
 MONUMENTS, STEPS,
 TOMB FRONTS, FENCE POSTS,
 Underpinning, Cellar Stones, etc., etc.,
 furnished to order, by
 C. R. & C. Mitchell.

A large collection of Monumental Designs, (all drawn in the Establishment) and which, as well as the heartburn, bodyburn, and southern dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a PAIN, SPASM, or Morbid Inaction of the bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until action
 and strength is restored to the system.

For NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA,
 Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

For SCORPULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, and keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and tonic effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate
 the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health.

Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because:—
 To PREVENT THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which seed the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious
 Affections arise from some derangement—either
 torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver.
 Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow
 into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhoea, prevails.
 Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness,
 restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness;
 sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin
 and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow;
 the stomach aches; the bowels sore to the touch;
 the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhoea, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two freely
 in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

CHRONIC GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely, as a DINNER PLANT, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to
 the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

W. STONE'S VEGETABLE LIQUID CATHARTIC AND FAMILY PHYSIC

THE most important discovery ever made in Medical Science, being a compound of salts and fluids which form the most powerful and agreeable physic ever offered to the public. Its necessity to such medicine has long been felt both in the family and in the hospital. Its advantages over cathartics given in the form of Pills or Powder, must be obvious to every prudent person. It operates more immediately on the system, and at the same time is infinitely less difficult to administer, being agreeable to the taste. It not only produces its effects where physic is required, but it cures habitual constiveness, leaving the bowels free. It expels all humors from the system, and is a certain cure for piles, regulates the action of the liver, frees the stomach from biliousness, restores the whole system, and removes the cause of all local pains such as

Rheumatism, Neuralgia,
TIC DOULOUREUX, GOUT,
Pain in the Head, Side,
Stomach, &c. &c.

may also be relied upon in all diseases of the bowels—DYSSENTERY, DIARRHOEA AND ALBIDIA MORBIDA, and all other disorders of the bowels. Again we repeat, TRY IT!—it is another recommendation. No family will without it after they have properly tested its merits. Reader, if you have tried other remedies without success, despair not—relief is now at hand. Are you suffering from Sciatica, six bottles of our Liquid Cathartic will cure you. Would be relieved from habitual constiveness, three bottles will effect all that you desire. If you are afflicted with Rheumatism, Neuralgia, or other local pains, two bottles will free you from them. Common colds will be eradicated from the blood by one of our six bottles. In short, if you require a physic for any purpose, this is the most perfect, safe, and agreeable to the taste that has been placed within the reach of the public.

The Five Peas

There were five peas in a pea-shell; they were green, and the shell was green, and therefore they fancied that the whole world was green—and they had a right to do so. The shell increased in size, and so did the peas. They made a very good domestic arrangement, placing themselves in a neat row. The sun sent its warm rays upon the pod, and the rain kept it fresh; they were sheltered and comfortable,—had light by day, and darkness by night, as it should be; and the peas became larger and always more thoughtful, as they sat idle there, for as yet they had no companion.

"Shall we always be kept sitting here?" said they. "We shall become quite hardened staying here so long. We cannot help fancying that there must be something going on outside."

But weeks passed on; the peas became yellow and the pod became yellow. "The whole world is turning yellow," said they—and they had a right to think so. At length, they felt a pulling at the pod; it was broken off, and fell in a human hand, and from thence into a pocket of a jacket along with several other full pea shells.

"They will soon be opened," said they, and waited expecting it. "Would that I could foresee which of us will ramble the farthest," said the smallest pea—the shell will soon give way."

"All must happen as it is ordained!" said the largest. Crack went the pod, and all five of the peas rolled out in the clear sunshine. They lay in a child's hand; a little boy looked at them, and remarked that they were very nice peas for his pop-gun; and one of them was forthwith consigned to the gun and shot away.

"Now I fly away, out into the world; catch me if you can!" and it was off. "I," said another, "shall fly straight to the sun; it is a superb pea-shell, and will be very comfortable for me." Off he went.

"I shall sleep wherever I alight," said two of the others, "but we shall roll far enough," and they first rolled on the floor, and then were also fired from the gun.

"All must happen as it is ordained!" exclaimed the last, as it, too, was shot away. It flew upon an old board under a garret window, and alighted in a hole in the wood, where there was some moss and some soft earth; the moss covered it up, and then it lay hidden, but not forgotten by its great Maker. "All must happen as it is ordained!" it exclaimed.

In the little garret room dwelt a poor woman who went out during the day to clean stoves, to chop firewood, or do any other manual work; for though she was clever, and capable of doing many better things, she was extremely poor; and at home in her little chamber lay her daughter, a half-grown girl, so slender and delicate, for a whole year she had been confined to her bed, hovering between life and death.

"She is going to her little sister," said the woman. "I had these two children; it was hard work for me to support them both, but it pleased our Lord to take one of them from me; would that I might be permitted to keep the other who is still with me; but God does not see best to separate them, and she is going fast to her little sister."

up behind the window, and waving in the wind?" said the young invalid; and her mother went to the window and opened it a little.

"Why! it is a tiny plant," said she, "that has shot up with some small green leaves. How could it have got into the crevice, I wonder? It will be a little garden for you to look at."

So the sick girl's bed was moved nearer the window, where she could see the little sprouting plant, and the mother went away to her work.

"Mother, I think I am getting better," said the sick girl, one afternoon. The sunshine has been so warm to-day, the little plant thrives nicely, and I think that I shall thrive too, and be able to get out into the bright sunshine."

"Would to God you could!" exclaimed the mother, but she feared that never would be. She put a little stick close by the green spout, which had inspired her daughter with the pleasant thought of returning health, that twining round it, it might not be snatched by the wind; she fastened a bit of black thread to the board, and tied the other end to a little projection above the upper framework of the window, that the tendrils of the young plant might have something to cling to, and creep up, as they grew longer; and every day they were observed to have run up higher and higher.

"It is actually beginning to flower," said the woman one morning; and now also she began to entertain hope and belief that her poor sick girl would recover. She had remarked that lately the child had been lively, that for the last few mornings she had raised herself without assistance in her bed, and sat up, looking at her little garden of one plant. The following week the girl was able to leave her bed for an hour or two. She sat cheerfully in the warm sunshine near the open window, on the out side of which bloomed a lovely, pea-flower. The little girl stooped her head, and softly kissed the delicate blossom. That day was like a festival in the humble garret room.

"A kind Providence has planted this sweet flower up here, and permitted it to thrive, in order to convey hope and gladness to you, my beloved child—and to me!" said the happy mother, smiling gratefully on the flower, as if it had been an angel-messenger from heaven.

But what has become of the other peas—those which were scattered abroad in the wide world? "Catch me if you can," fell in to the spout on the roof, and came next into a pigeon's claw, where it lay like Jonah in the belly of the whale. The two lazy ones landed in the same sort of place, and were eaten by pigeons, and certainly that was becoming solidly useful; but the fourth, who aspired to reaching the sun, fell into the stagnant gutter, and lay days and weeks in the stagnant water, until it became quite swelled.

"I am becoming enormously stout," said the pea; "I shall burst at this rate. I am sure no pea was ever so large, and that none can equal me in size. I am the most remarkable, doubtless, of the five from the old pod."

And the gutter agreed with it. But the young girl stood at the window with sparkling eyes, with the glow of health upon her cheeks, and folded her delicate white hands over the pea-blossom, and thanked the Giver of all good for it.

"I prefer my pea!" said the gutter.

A Western Law Suit.

La' is' la' out west. Some years ago, an attachment was issued and levied upon the stock in trade of a stage company, and the consequence was very disastrous, of course; passengers piled up here and there, just where the writ found them; mails were stopped, and the deuce was to pay everywhere.

J. Jones, attorney for company, went out through the several counties of the state where the 'plunder' was held by authority of the people of the state of — and moved (as Jones might move, as the law then stood) before a side judge, for a 'dissolution of the writ.' Jones went forward swimmingly for a while and knocked over the writs, one after another, like a row of bricks. He finally reached the county of — where he found the attorneys on the other side, and the judge, all evidently expecting him, for they were pouring whiskey down the judge at a log-tavern, telling him funny stories, and talking extravagantly about his legal ability and the high reputation which he had acquired on the bench.

The judge at last took his seat, put on his 'specs,' opened the 'Revised Statutes,' and spread them out solemnly before him, and 'the hearing' went forward. But the judge grew drunker and drunker; his eyes waxed heavy; and now and then he gave a half-gurge sideways in his seat. Jones raised several objections to the proceedings, and insisted upon points of irregularity; but the judge replied that he did-did-n't tra-ta-vel outside-er 'The Staters!' At which the opposite counsel nodded their heads and winked at each other.

At last Jones saw that it was of no use. Some six or seven times the judge had told him 'he couldn't travel outside of the Staters.' Yes! he would 'rise upon him,' there was no other way. He did 'rise upon him':

"You old bloat!" exclaimed Jones, 'you've been in the keeping of those two pettifoggers all the morning—you are completely pickled with whiskey! you are so drunk you don't know law from gospel! Can't travel outside the statute, you can't? No you can't! And if those two 'shuysters' on the other side could get one more drink down your throat, you couldn't travel, at all—outside the statute, or any where else!'

It is a singular fact, that Jones had no trouble after this.—Knickerbocker Magazine.

Go Work To-day.

List thee, Christian! The voice of the Master is not drowned by the din of business. The claims of religion are not abated by your hurry and stress of occupation. The still, small voice bids you be at work to-day, for God is peremptory. What though you are pressed with care; religious duty is care's great cure. What though the car of business drags heavily; it is by prayer and heavenly hope that the wheels are to be kept in motion.

Go to your work to-day in the vineyard. God has need of you now. When your convenience serves, he will have done with you. He will not accept the service of your leisure hours. Religion's great name and triumph are realized in the subjection of the Change to the Closet, of the Bank to the Bible, of the street to the sanctuary. What is a religion worth that can flourish only as weeds do in a desolate and untended field? What is that principle worth that cannot withstand the least pleasure of worldly solicitation?

Go work to-day. Now, when labor will be a cross; now, when your example will be valuable; now, when the world should know your principles; now, when the mass are trying to serve God and Mammon,—go work for God and you can do something worthy of your vows. What does the cause of Christ need more than examples of that religion which makes a place for the prayer meeting in every week's calendar, and which shuts the door of the closet upon the world until God is worshipped? The great attainment of life is to use this world without abusing it,—to attend manfully to any claim of business, to breast with heroism every storm of commercial embarrassment, to do one's best in whatever circumstances may develop, and, at the same time to live out the Christian by a course of daily usefulness; to be at the same time a good business man and a warm-hearted disciple; to take care for every interest of religion amidst all secular cares; to lay a stone on Zion's walls with every accession of worldly fortune—this is true Christianity. Nor will any principle of living insure men from the snares of covetousness, and the deep pit of commercial dishonesty, except those simple rules of living which the Gospel prescribes for all times.

Go work to-day. Seek out some humble labor of love. It may save you from falling. Invite some interruption of your excessive worldliness. Call in some umpire who shall put down the false and ruinous claims of Mammon.

Have a religion which can live and be honored on the Exchange as well as at home, in busy season as in dull times, on rainy Sabbaths as on fair ones, in the afternoon as in the morning, when prosperity fans as when adversity baffles your progress. Seek a cure of your religious distempers by going to work to-day for God.

Secrets of Trade.

It cannot be expected that legislators will have a practical knowledge of the subjects, which come before them; but when this does happen, the country must derive benefit from the circumstance. Roger Sherman, when a member of Congress, detected some extensive frauds in the accounts of a shoemaker, who had taken an army contract. This grave legislator and incorruptible patriot, had in early life been a shoemaker himself, otherwise the fraud would have been undetected. Some years ago, a bill was brought into the British Parliament to tax the income on shops. A member had finished a long speech against the bill, when Sir Gregory Turner rose and made his first speech, in which he elicited thunders of applause from the galleries for his deep knowledge of the secrets of trade:

"What," says he, "not tax shops! I am amazed! They are able to pay any duty allowed. I myself knew a little milliner in St. James's street, who from only selling ribbons, and wires, and gauzes, was able to marry a baronet. Nay, I know it to be a fact, for I am that very baronet, and my wife is that very little milliner. I have looked into her book, and it is astonishing what profits are made even on the wire of a cap, would you believe it, sir, that Lady Gregory Page Turner, when she kept a retail shop in St. James's street, could sell a cap for nine shillings, which did not stand her above two and six-pence; and that she might have charged twelve guineas for a cloak, the materials of which, did not amount to more than four pounds; therefore, I say, the tax is a good one."

Grass.

Consider what we owe merely to the meadow grass, to the covering of the dark ground by that glorious enamel, by the companies of those soft, and countless, and peaceful spears. The fields! Follow but forth for a little time the thoughts of all that we ought to recognize in those words. All spring and summer is in them,—the walks by silent, scented paths,—the rests in noonday heat—the joy of herds and flocks—the power of all shepherd life and meditation,—the life of sunlight upon the world, falling in emerald streaks, and falling in soft blue shadows, where else it would have struck upon the dark mould, or scorching dust—pastures beside the pacing brooks—soft banks and knolls of lowly hills—thymy slopes of down overlooked by the blue line of lifted sea—crisp lawns all dim with early dew, or smooth in evening warmth of barred sunshine, dented by happy feet, and softening in their fall the sound of loving voices; all these are summed in those simple words; and these are not all. We may not measure to the full depth of this heavenly gift, in our own land: though still, as we think of it longer, the infinite of that meadow sweetness, Shakespeare's peculiar joy, would open on us more and more, yet we have it but in part. Go out in the spring time, among the meadows that slope from the shores of the Swiss lakes to the roots of their lower mountains. There, mingled with the taller gentians and the white narcissus, the grass grows deep and free; and as you follow the winding mountain paths, beneath arching boughs all veiled and dim with blossoms—paths that forever droop and rise over the green banks and mounds sweeping down in the scented undulation, steep to the blue water, studded here and there with new-mown heaps, filling all the air with fainter sweetness—look up towards the higher hills, where the waves of everlasting green roll silently into their long inlets among the shadows of the pines; and we may, perhaps, at last know the meaning of those quiet words of the 147th Psalm, "He maketh grass to grow upon the mountains."

There are also several lessons symbolically connected with this subject, which we must not allow to escape us. Observe the peculiar characters of the grass, which adapt it especially for the service of man, are its apparent humility and cheerfulness. Its humility, in that it seems created only for the lowest service; appointed to be trodden on, and fed upon. Its cheerfulness, in that it seems to exult under all kinds of violence and suffering. You roll it, and it is stronger the next day; you mow it, and it multiplies its shoots, as if it were grateful: you tread upon it, and it only sends up richer perfume. Spring comes, and it rejoices with all the earth—glowing with variegated flame of flowers—waving in soft depth of fruitful strength. Winter comes, and, though it will not mock its fellow plants by growing then, it will not pine and mourn, and turn colorless or leafless as they. It is always green; and is only the brighter and gayer for the hoar-frost.—Ruskin.

In Debt and out of Debt.

Of what a hideous progeny of ill is debt the father! What meanness, what invasions of self-respect, what cares, what double dealing! How in due season, it will carve the frank, open face into wrinkles; how, like a knife it will stab the honest heart! And then its transformations. How it has been known to change a goodly face into a mask of brass; how with the terrible custom of debt has the true man become a callous trickster. A freedom from debt, and what nourishing sweetness may be found in cold water; what toothsome in a dry crust, what ambrosial nourishment in a hard egg! Be sure of it, he who dines out of debt, though his meal be a biscuit and an onion, dines in "The Apollo." And then for raiment, what warmth in a threadbare coat, if the tailor's receipt be in your pocket! what Tyrian purple in the faded waistcoat, the vest not owned for; how glossy the well-worn hat, if it covers not the aching head of a debtor! Next the home sweets, the outdoor recreation of the free man. The knock at the street door fall not like a knell on his heart; the foot on the staircase, though he lie on the third pair, sends no spasms through his anatomy; at the rap on his door he can crow, come, "come in!" and his pulse beats healthfully, his heart sinks not in his bowels. See him abroad. How he returns look for look with every passenger; how he saunters; how meeting an acquaintance, he stands and gossips; but then this man knows no debt that casts a drag in the richest wine; that makes the food of the gods unwholesome, indigestible; that sprinkles the banquet of a Lucullus with ashes, and drops soot in the soup of an emperor; debt, that like the moth, makes valueless furs and velvets, enclosing the wearer in a festering prison, (the shirt of Nessus was a shirt not paid for) debt that writes upon free-hood halls the hand writing of the attorney; that puts a voice of terror in the knocker; that makes the heart quake at the hunted fire-side; debt, the invisible demon that walks abroad with a man, now quickening his steps, now making him look on all sides like a hunted beast, and now bringing to his face the ashy hue of death as the unconscious passenger looks glancingly upon him.

Poverty is a bitter draught, yet it may and can, sometimes with advantage, be gulped down. If the drinker make wry faces, there may after all be a wholesome goodness in the cup. But debt, however courteously it may be offered, is the cup of Syren; and the wine, spiced and delicious though it be, is poison. The man out of debt, though with a flaw in his jerkin, a crack in his shoe leather, and a hole in his hat, is still the son of liberty, free as the singing lark above him; but the debtor, though clothed in the utmost bravery, what is he but a serf out upon a holiday—a slave to be reclaimed at any instant by his owner, the creditor.

My son, if poor, see wine in the running spring; see the mouth water at a last week's roll; think a thread-bare coat the only wear, and acknowledge a whitewashed garret the fittest housing place for a gentleman. Do this, and flee doubt. So shall thy heart be at peace, and the sheriff be confounded.—Douglas Jerrold.

A Turn For Business.

Next to a thorough grounding in good principles, perhaps the thing most essential to success in life is a habit of communicating easily with the world. By entering readily into conversation with others, we not only acquire information by being admitted to the stores which men of various modes of thinking have amassed, and thereby gain an insight into the peculiarities of human character, but those persons into whose society we may be accidentally thrown are gratified to think that they have been able to afford instruction. Seeing that we appreciate their favorite subject, they conceive a high opinion of our penetration, and not unfrequently exert themselves wonderfully to promote our interests. Men in business, particularly, who have this happy turn of being able to slide as it were into discourse, and to throw it into that train which is best suited to the capacities and humors of others, are wonderfully indebted to it for the run of customers it entices to their shops. A stately, grave, or solemn manner is very inappropriate in measuring stuffs by the yard; and though a man be penetrated by the deepest sense of gratitude, if his bow be stiff, and his countenance not of a relaxing cast, he makes not half so favorable an impression as another who may not perhaps be a more deserving person in the main, but has a more graceful method of acknowledging his obligations.—It is astonishing, too, at how cheap a rate good will of testifying satisfaction with the pleasantness of the weather, is often a very effectual way of extending popularity; it is regarded as an act of condescension when addressed to some, while with others it is received as the indication of a happy temperament, which at all times is attractive. A person who has little to say, or in other words, who does not deign to open his mouth except when it is indispensably necessary, never proves generally acceptable, you will hear such an one described as "a very good sort of a man in his way," but people rather avoid him. He has neither the talent of conversing in an amusing vein himself, nor of lending others to do so; and they are only the arrantest babblers who are contented with an inanimate listener.

Ivory.

Few of our lady readers, while they peep so bewitchingly over the tips of their ivory fans, or play so nimbly and gracefully over the white keys of the piano, are wont to cast a thought towards the manner in which this material is procured, the quantities of it which are annually needed, and the number of noble animals which are yearly slain for the purpose of supplying the constantly increasing demand. Mr. Dajlon, a celebrated Sheffield manufacturer, estimates that the annual consumption of ivory in the town of Sheffield alone, is about one hundred and eighty tons, equal in value to £30,000, and requiring the labor of five hundred persons to work it up for trade. 'The number of tusks to make up this amount of ivory is 45,000; and according to this the number of elephants slaughtered every year for the Sheffield market is 22,500. But supposing some tusks to be cast, and some animals to have died a natural death, it may fairly be estimated that 18,000 are killed for that purpose.

The Cork Tree.

Cork is nothing more or less than the bark of evergreen oak, growing principally in Spain and other countries bordering the Mediterranean; in English gardens it is only a curiosity. When the cork tree is about fifteen years old, the bark has attained a thickness and quality suitable for manufacturing purposes; and, after stripping, a further growth of eight years produces a second crop; and so on at intervals for even ten or twelve crops. The bark stripped from the tree in pieces two inches in thickness, of considerable length, and of such width as to retain the curved form of the trunk when it has been stripped. The bark peeler or cutter makes a slit in the bark with a knife, perpendicularly from the top of the trunk to the bottom; he makes another incision parallel to it, and at some distance from the former; and two short horizontal cuts at the top and bottom. For stripping off the piece thus isolated, he uses a kind of knife with two handles and a curved blade. Sometimes after the cuts have been made, he leaves the tree to throw off the bark by spontaneous action of the vegetation within the trunk. The detached pieces are soaked in water, and are placed over a fire when nearly dry; they are, in fact, scorched a little on both sides, and acquire a somewhat more compact texture by this scorching. In order to get rid of the curvature, and bring them flat, they are pressed down with weights while yet hot.—Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

Purification of Ice.

In the language of a scientific writer, ice is only a re-establishment of the parts of water in their natural state. The mere absence of fire is supposed to account for their establishment. Galileo was the first who observed that ice is lighter than the water by freezing. These bubbles, during their production, acquire great expansive power, so that the containing vessels are burst. Ice usually forms on the surface of the water; but this, like the crystallization, may be varied by an alteration of circumstances. It is an important law of nature that ice forms much less rapidly below the surface than on it. If the freezing was equally below as above, ponds and lakes and rivers would become solid masses of ice. Ice is formed in layers, resembling what is seen when a tree is cut down, denoting the gradual growth of the tree. In ice fifteen inches thick there will be found twenty-one layers, and so on, in that proportion.

Perfumery.

The extensive flower farms in the neighborhood of Nice, Grasse, Montpellier, and Cannes, in France, at Adrianople, (Turkey in Europe), at Broussa and Usak, (Turkey in Asia), and at Miteham, in England, in a measure, indicate the commercial importance of that branch of chemistry called perfumery.

British India and Europe come annually, at the very lowest estimate, 150,000 gallons of perfumed spirits, under various titles, such as eau de cologne, essence of lavender, esprit de rose, &c. The art of perfumery does not, however, confine itself to the production of scents for the handkerchief and bath, but extends to imparting odor to inodorous bodies, such as soap, oil, starch, and grease, which are consumed at the toilette of fashion.

Some idea of the importance of this art to commerce may be formed when we state that one of the large perfumers of Grasse and Paris employ annually 80,000 lbs. of orange flowers, 60,000 lbs. of cassia flowers, 54,000 lbs. of rose leaves, 32,000 lbs. of jasmine blossoms, 32,000 lbs. of violets, 20,000 lbs. of tuberose, 16,000 lbs. of lilac, besides rose-mary, mint, lemon, citron, thyme, and other odoriferous plants in like proportion. The quantity of odoriferous substances used in this way is far beyond the conception of those even used to abstract statistics, giving rise to an amount of industry truly gratifying.

The consumption of perfumery increases with the civilized state of society—it is strictly one of the arts of peace; it supplies one of our senses with a gratification which, by use, becomes tutored to distinguish every thing that is sweet to itself, and this art is certainly calculated to stamp the refinement of taste on one of our desires—the desire of pleasing the olfactory nerve.

To the chemical philosopher, the study of perfumery opens a book as yet unread; the practical perfumer, on his laboratory shelves, exhibits many rare essential oils, such as essential oil of the flower of the acacia farnesiana, essential oil of violets, tuberose, jessamine, and others, the composition of which have yet to be determined.

The exquisite pleasure derived from smelling fragrant flowers would almost instinctively induce man to attempt to separate the odoriferous principle from them, so as to have the perfume when the season denies the flowers; and thus we find the alchemists of old torturing the plants in every way their invention could devise for this end. Their experiments were not wholly unsuccessful; indeed, upon their foundation the whole art of perfumery has been reared, which observation applies to numerous other useful manufactures. Without recapitulating those facts, which may be found diffused through nearly all the old authors on medical botany, chemistry, pharmacy, and works of this character, from the time of Paracelsus to Celsus, we may state at once the mode of operation adopted by the practical perfumer of the present day for preparing the various extracts or essences, waters, oils, pomades, &c., used in his calling. The processes are divided into four distinct operations.—Scientific American.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, May 3d, 1856.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

ANNEXATION OF BRAINTREE NECK.—This act was consummated on Tuesday last. On that day Governor Gardner prefixed his signature to the Bill which united the destinies of the thriving little village of Braintree Neck with those of her former allegiance. Braintree Neck is now a part of Quincy. The intelligence of the re-union was received by all classes of our citizens with the most marked demonstrations of rejoicings—in which the bride-elect participated,—leaving no doubt but that the alliance is mutual and cordial, and for the best interests of all concerned; we have every reason to believe that it will eminently prove so.

The citizens of the "Neck," on Wednesday evening last, illuminated their houses, fired a salute, had a display of fire-works, and other demonstrations of rejoicing. A torch-light procession was formed, accompanied by the Weymouth Band, Maj. T. C. Webb, acting as Chief Marshal, and marched to the Point, where the Village Engine Company joined them; thence proceeded and received the Niagara Company; continuing their march they were joined by the Hancock Light Guards, in uniform, and on arriving at the south part of the town, the Tiger Engine Company united with them; they were counter-marched to the Hancock House and received several members of the Legislature, the Selectmen, and other invited guests, and then returned by the way of the Point to the Neck, where the time was passed in making speeches, partaking of a bountiful collation, and other sources of enjoyment.

NEW CHIEF ENGINEER.—Those who have been benefited by the labors of our fire department, and can appreciate its worth, will be delighted to see it announced that Washington M. French has been elected Chief Engineer, and has entered upon the duties of his office. It will be remembered that Mr. French has been an active, energetic and influential member of the institution the last fourteen years, and a considerable portion of that period, foreman of the Niagara Engine Company. The invaluable services he has rendered, are now but simply and poorly rewarded by the highest honors of the Department—yet simple and poor though it be, it must afford to him pleasurable satisfaction.

QUINCY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.—By the Report of the Directors, made at the fifth annual meeting, it appears that this company has issued the past year 4006 policies, and that the amount insured in the same period of time was $4,281,447, on which the premiums amounted to $19,130; and the interest on loans and dividends on bank stock, to $3,776; losses paid during the year amounted to $13,130.47; and dividends returned being 50 per cent. on premiums paid $9,155.58; the present cash fund is $56,351; being an increase for the past year, after paying losses, dividends and expenses, of $19,408.55. The whole amount at risk is 6,957,524; and the number of policies outstanding, 7,379. No company whose statement we have seen, equal in amount the accumulation of this company in a single year. If prosperity continues to attend it, it is destined to be one of the largest insurance companies in the State.

MEAN, BIGOTRY AND FOLLY. The city government of Philadelphia refused the use of Independence Hall, to the friends of Hon. James Buchanan, our late minister to England, for the purpose of giving the distinguished diplomat a fitting reception on his return to his native state. The next step of such fanatics if they had the power, would be to disfranchise him.

CONGRATULATORY.—In a recent number of the Eastern Times, an able and faithful democratic paper, published the last quarter of a century at Bath (Me.) we notice with pleasure, that Col. John Abbott announces himself as editor and proprietor of that journal—uplifts the vizor of his helmet, and in a "first bow," equalled only by Mr. Lord Chesterfield, makes known the shield and device he bears. "Suffice to say," he remarks, "the Times will be conducted on purely national democratic principles—sustaining the nominee of the next National Convention; whether it be that distinguished statesman and patriot, Franklin Pierce, or anybody else." That's the right talk; and no living man is better able and willing to talk and write appropriately, and consistently upon this noble and important theme, than John Abbott. We give him the right of fellowship, and wish him all honor and success in his new field of labor and usefulness.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.—We would call the attention of our citizens to the valuable real estate offered for sale by Mr. Dinegan in another column of our paper to-day. This property offers rare inducements for those in want of a pleasant, central and healthy location, within the immediate vicinity of schools, churches, &c., and but a few minutes walk from the Old Colony Depot. The sale recollect takes place this day. Be on hand in season.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. The present value of the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad stock is quoted at $86; the highest price since the union in 1854, $90 1-4, and the lowest, $71. Highest price of Fall River alone, $107 3-4, lowest 74; Old Colony highest $109, lowest $50.

ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES.—A correspondent of the Providence Patriot, who appears to be well informed on the subject, writing from London, says, the warlike movements making in England are to have a significant bearing upon the course which events may take in this country. Her army in the Canadas are to be largely increased, her navy, now in the East, which are no longer required there, are to be thrown upon our coast; and in case of the dismissal of Mr. Crampton, her minister at Washington, Mr. Dallas, our Minister at London, will be sent home, which virtually will be a declaration of war.

MORE TROUBLE IN KANSAS. Sheriff Jones, a government officer, was shot—and it is feared dangerously,—by one of Sharpe's Rifles, while in the discharge of his duty. If that ill-fated Territory could but disgorge from her midst, the nest of fanatics who are jeopardizing her freedom, prompted as they are to deeds of violence by outside influences, we have no doubt she would soon wheel into the confederacy a free and independent State. Her true sons have every reason to exclaim, "Deliver us from our friends."

CONSUMPTION. This disease, with all its envisaged terrors, finds an effectual barrier to its progress in G. W. Stone's Cough, Consumption and Bronchitis Elixir. It is disarmed and vanquished at once, even as old Goliath was dismayed by young King David. Let the afflicted try it, and success will be certain.

JUVENILE SINGING SCHOOL AT LYCEUM HALL. This School for the instruction of the young in the elementary principles of this useful and ornamental branch of education, has opened we learn under very favorable auspices. Mrs. Webster's success as a teacher in this class of studies, is too well known in this community, to require any comment at our hands. Parents should avail themselves of an opportunity for cultivating in their children a talent which may be of the first importance in the formation and development of their future characters.

Days of instruction, Tuesdays and Saturdays. Terms for the course—including sixteen lessons, one dollar.

HORSE RAILROAD TO DORCHESTER. The South Boston Mercury says that $75,000 of the capital stock of $100,000 required for the Boston and Dorchester Horse Railroad, has been subscribed, and there is a prospect that the remainder will be speedily obtained, and the road put under immediate contract. The branch road is to run through Dorchester Avenue from Milton Lower Mills Village to the foot of Summer Street, and thence through Broad Street to State Street.

STORE BREAKING. During Thursday night, the store of John Brierley & Co. was entered by forcing open the side door. The desk and money drawer were searched, but nothing taken as can be discovered.

On Friday morning, a horse and chaise was found fastened near the store of Caleb Packard, and it is supposed to have belonged to the rogues, who got frightened and fled.

The attention of our citizens is called to the business cards of Messrs. Warren, & Co. to be found in another column of our paper. We can safely recommend this house to those of our friends who may be in want of such goods, and assure them when visiting the city it will be for their interest to give them a call.

For the Patriot.
Boston Correspondence.
Boston, May 1, 1856.
New facilities of access to Quincy—Horse Railroad—North Quincy Depot—Established—Massachusetts Legislature—Congress—California Prospects—Horrible events in Central America—Uncle Sam's probable visit there, with solid arguments.

I sometime since spoke of the projected horse railroad from Milton Lower Mills, over the Dorchester Turnpike, to State street, Boston. It is now likely to be built, and put in operation the present season, as $75,000 of the capital stock of $100,000 has been subscribed. There is little doubt that the remainder will be speedily obtained, and the first instalment called for. A branch horse railroad from Quincy to Dorchester is the next event that will very likely occur. The whole expense of the branch intersecting at Dorchester, would probably come within a figure of $30,000. A sum which would soon be subscribed in Quincy and vicinity.

Another facility of access to your flourishing town has been made the last week, by the establishment of a new station, on the line of the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad, at the crossing under Neponset Turnpike, to be called the North Quincy Depot; being some hundred rods south of Neponset River. A permanent station here, would be very likely to bring in a rapidly increased population, to say nothing of the rise of valuation in this corner of Quincy, hitherto an obscure place.

In regard to State legislative matters, the Committee, since my last, have reported against any increase in the Bank capital of the State. It is proposed to make a new County, to be called Washington, out of Middlesex and Worcester. The Committee on Agriculture, in the House of Representatives, reported the following bill to-day, to punish frauds by the adulteration of milk:

"If any person shall be guilty of adulterating milk sold in this Commonwealth, by water or otherwise, he or they shall, on conviction, be fined fifty dollars for the first offence, one half of which shall be paid to the complainant; and for the second offence, shall be imprisoned in the House of Correction not less than two nor more than six months."

In Congress very little of interest has been transacted for sometime past. The three million bill is still under discussion in the Senate. It is settled, I think, that there shall be no alteration in the tariff this session. The whole expense of carrying on Uncle Sam's government last year, was sixty-five million of dollars. This year the estimate is $75,000,000.

Political matters the present week are barren. A great effort is making to take Fillmore out of the presidential field, and all opposition to the national administration, unite on Colonel Fremont.

Our advices from California, are to April 5th. The last steamer to New York brought $2,000,000, and a large number of passengers. Among them Governor Bigler.

You will probably allude in the columns of the Patriot to the dreadful massacre, or terrible outrage which occurred at Panama on the 15th of April by which some thirty emigrants from California were killed and as many more wounded. It has produced a profound sensation here and at Washington. Both routes to California are now dangerous to travel. The one over Nicaragua is completely embargoed. The Costa Ricans have taken possession of Virgin Bay on the lake and San Juan del Sur on the Pacific and have issued a proclamation ordering the troops, to spare neither age nor sex but to cut down every American they may encounter. But Brother Jonathan will be there, and demand for a redress of these wrongs. And it will not be unlikely to see England brought into the account for secretly sympathizing with the movements of Costa Rica, against Americans, making the transit from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific ocean. But we shall see.

Marriages.

In this town, on the 20th ult., by Rev. N. Clark, Mr. RICHARD G. ELIOTT to Miss ELLEN M. DAWSON.

On the 20th ult., by the same, Mr. FRANKLIN A. DAVIS of Milton, to Miss SARAH A. B. STEVENSON.

We always derive a pleasure in answering the requests of our friends, especially when their wish is to appear under our hymenal head. But such requests are doubly enhanced when they are accompanied with some testimonial of their esteem—inviting us, as it were, to share with them in their happiness, and a participator in the fullness of their joy. In the instance above, our feelings cheerfully respond to this impulse: we heartily congratulate our young friends for the good part which they have chosen; we sympathize with them in their hopes and their joys; and our sincere prayer is, that all their fond anticipations of the future may be more than realized.

On the 29th ult., by the same, Mr. Joseph B. Lawton of Roxbury, to Miss Mary P. FAXON.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 26 ult., Crissa Isabel, daughter of Mr. James L. and Mrs. Christina E. Wilson of South Boston, aged 2 years and 2 months.

Ye think it all too early,
For the stillness of the tomb;
Why should innocence and beauty,
Be subjected to its gloom?
When so many weary, way worn,
Would be thankful for the boon:
Is it strange that in your secret souls,
Ye murmur—all too soon.

O beautiful! most beautiful!
The little white cheek,
And sweet the smiling cherub lip,
The folded hands so meek.
The flowers that rest so lovingly,
Around the pulseless clay;
Are fitting emblems of the life,
So briefly passed away.

God "Chasteneth whom he loveth,"
He will help you to endure;
In your own perhaps brief sojourn,
There was need of some strong lure.
May her presence ever near you,
Be a solace and a boon;
Teaching you that when God willeth,
It can never be too soon.

W. STONE'S LIQUID CATHARTIC

FAMILY PHYSICIAN.

THE most important discovery ever made in Medical Science, being a compound of natural Roots which form the most powerful and agreeable physic ever offered to the public. A necessity of such a medicine has long been felt by the heads of families and physicians. Its advantages over cathartics given in the form of Pills or Powders, must be obvious to every prudent person. It operates more immediately and safely upon the system, and at the same time is infinitely less difficult to administer, being agreeable to the taste. It not only produces a healthy action where physic is required, but completely restores the system, leaving the bowels free. It expels all humors from the system, is a certain cure for piles, regulates the action of the liver, frees the stomach from biliousness, restores the whole system, and removes the cause of all local pains such as hematoma, Neuralgia, TIC DOULOUREUX, GOUT, Pain in the Head, Side, Stomach, &c. &c.

may also be relied upon in all diseases of the bowels—DYSENTERY, DIARRHOEA AND OLEA MORBUS, yield at once to its influence. Again we repeat, TRY IT. It is so other recommendation. No family without it! It has been tested by thousands of persons, and its efficacy is beyond dispute. It is a certain cure for piles, regulates the action of the liver, frees the stomach from biliousness, restores the whole system, and removes the cause of all local pains such as

The Ocean Depths.

The life of one who explores the mysteries of the sea, is not more perilous than fascinating. The charm of terror hangs around it, and the interminable succession of exciting events renders it dear to its professor. Not to the common divers of the east, who can remain but for a fraction of time beneath the wave, and grope fearfully among rugged ocean mounds, but to the adept in the civilized mode of diving, who in his protective armor may remain submerged for hours, and wander, with impunity, for miles along those unknown regions, far below the sea. To him are laid open the horrors of the watery creation, and he may gaze upon such scenes as Arabian story tells us were presented to the fearful eyes of Abdallah. To him the most thrilling occurrences of the upper world seem trivial; for in his memory, he retains thoughts that may well fill the soul with dread.

I am a diver—a diver from choice—and I am proud of my profession. Where is such courage required as is needed here? It is nothing to be a soldier—a diver however, but I forbear. I will tell my story, and leave others to judge concerning it.

An appalling shipwreck occurred, not long ago, upon the wildest part of the coast of Newfoundland. The tidings of this calamity reached the ears of thousands; but amid the crowd of accidents which followed in quick succession, it was soon forgotten. Not by us, however. We found that the vessel had sunk upon a spot where the water's depth was by no means great, and that a daring man might easily reach her.

She was a steamer called the Marmon, and had been seen suddenly going down, without an instant's warning, by some fishermen near by. She had, undoubtedly, struck a hidden rock, and had thus been, in one moment, destroyed.

I spoke to my associates of the plan, and they approved it. No time was lost in making the necessary preparations, and a short time beheld us embark in our small schooner for the sunken ship. There were six of us, and we anticipated extraordinary success.

I was the leader, and generally ventured upon any exploit in which their was uncommon danger. Not that the others were cowards; on the contrary, they were all brave men, but I was gifted with a coolness and a presence of mind of which others were destitute. As two persons were needed to explore the Marmon, I had selected as my companion a young fellow, whose steadiness and dauntless courage had several times been fearfully tested.

It was a calm and pleasant day, but the southern and eastern horizon looked deceitful. Small, suspicious clouds were gathering there, ill of aspect, and "sneaking fellows—regular hang-dog fellows," as my comrade, Rimmer, remarked to me. Nevertheless, we were not to be put off by a little cloudiness in the sky, but boldly prepared to venture.

So deep was the water, that no vestige of a ship's mast remained above the surface, to point out the resting place of the Marmon. We were compelled, therefore, to select the scene of operation according to the best of our ability. Down went the sails of our schooner, and Rimmer and I put our diving armor, and we fixed on our helmets tightly, and screwed on the hose. One by one each clumsy article was adjusted. The weights were hung, and we were ready.

"It looks terribly blackish, Berton," said Rimmer to me.

"Oh," I replied, gaily, "it's only a little mist—all right!"

Pshaw! it's only Rimmer.

"Ah!" He uttered a low exclamation, which sounded hollow from his cavernous helmet.

"All ready," I cried in a loud voice, which they, however could not distinguish. Then making a proper sign, I was swung over the side.

Down we went, I first, and Rimmer close behind me. It did not take a long time for us to reach the bottom. We found ourselves upon what seemed a broad plain, sloping downward, towards the south. Looking forward then, a dim, black object arose, which our experienced eyes knew to be a lofty rock.

I motioned to Rimmer that we should proceed there.

I cannot tell the strangeness of the sensation felt by one who first walks the bottom of the sea.

There are a thousand objects fitted to excite astonishment, even in the mind of him who has dared the deed a hundred times. All around us lay the plain covered with water; but here the eye could not pierce far away, as in the upper air, for the water, in the distance, grew opaque, and seemed to fade away into misty darkness. There was no sound, except the incessant gurgle which was produced by the escape of air from the breast valve, and the splash caused by our passage through the waters. We walked on at a good pace; for this armor which seemed so clumsy up above, is excellent below, and offers little inconvenience to the practiced wearer.

Fishes of every shape and size met our eyes, no matter where we turned. They swam swiftly by us; they sported in the water above; they raced and chased one another in every direction. Here a shoal of porpoises tumbled along in clumsy gambols, there a grampus might be seen rising slowly to the surface; here an immense number of smaller fish flashed past us, there some huge ones, with ponderous forms floated in the water lazily. Sometimes three or four placed themselves directly before us, staring at us and solemnly working their gills. There they would remain, till we came close up to them, and then, with a start, they would dart away.

All this time we were walking onward along the bottom of the sea, while above us, like a black cloud in the sky, we could see our boat slowly moving onward upon the water. And now, not more than a hundred yards before us, we could see the towering form of that ebony rock which had at first greeted our eyes from afar. As yet, we could not be certain that this was the place where the Marmon had struck. But soon, a round, black object became discernible, and we glanced at the rocky base.

Rimmer struck my arm, and pointed. I signed assent, and we moved on more quickly.

A few moments elapsed; we had come nearer to the rock. The black object now looked like the stern of a vessel whose hull lay there.

Suddenly, Rimmer struck me again, and pointed upward. Following the direction of his hand, I looked up, and saw the upper surface of the water all foamy and in motion. There was a momentary thrill through my heart, but it passed over. We were in a dangerous condition. A storm was coming on.

But should we turn back now, when we were so near the object of our search? Already it lay before us. We were close beside it. No, I would not. I signified to Rimmer to go forward, and we still kept our course.

Now the rock rose up before us, black, rugged, dismal. Its rough sides were worn by the action of the water, and in some places, were covered by marine plants, and nameless ocean vegetation. We passed onward, we clambered over a spar, which jutted from the cliff, and there lay the steamer.

The Marmon—there she lay, upright, with everything still standing. She had gone right down, and had settled in such a position among the rocks that she stood upright here, just as though she lay at her wharf. We rushed eagerly along and clambered up her side. There was a low mound in the water, which sounded warningly in our ears, and told us of a swift-approaching danger. What was to be done, must be done speedily. We hurried forward. Rimmer rushed to the cabin. I went forward to descend into the hold. I descended the ladder—I walked into the engineer's room.—All was empty here—all was water. The waves of the ocean had entered, and were sporting with the works of man. I went into the freight room. Suddenly I was startled by an appalling noise upon the deck. The heavy footsteps of some one, running as though in mortal fear, or most dreadful haste, sounded in my ears. Then my heart throbbed wildly; for it was a fearful thing to hear

Pshaw! it's only Rimmer.

I hurriedly ascended the deck by the first outlet that appeared. When I speak of hurry, I speak of the quickest movement possible, when cumbered with so much armor. But this movement of mine was quick; I rushed upwards; I sprang out on the deck.

It was Rimmer!

He stepped forward and clutched my arm. He pressed it with a convulsive grasp, and pointed to the cabin.

I attempted to go there.

He stamped his foot, and tried to hold me back. He pointed to the boat and implored me, with frantic gestures to go up.

It is appalling to witness the horror-struck soul trying to express itself by signs. It is awful to see the signs when no face is visible, and no voice is heard. I could not see his face plainly, but his eyes through his heavy mask, glowed like coals of fire.

"I will go!" I exclaimed. I sprang from him. He clasped his hands together, but dared not follow.

Good heavens! I thought, what fearful thing is here? What scene can be so dreadful as to paralyze the soul of a diver! I will see for myself.

I walked forward. I came to the cabin door. I entered the forward saloon, but saw nothing. A feeling of contempt came to me. Rimmer shall not come with me again, I thought. Yet I was awe struck. Down in the depths of the sea there is only silence—oh, how solemn! I paced the long saloon, which had echoed with the shrieks of the drowning passengers. Ah! there are thoughts which sometimes fill the soul, which are only felt by those to whom scenes of sublimity are familiar. Thus thinking, I walked to the after cabin and entered—

Oh! God of heaven!

Had not my hand clenched the door with a grasp, which mortal terror had made convulsive, I should have fallen to the floor. I stood nailed to the spot. For there, before me stood a crowd of people—men and women—caught in the last death struggle by the overwhelming waters, and fastened to the spot, each in the position in which death had found him. Each one had sprung from his chair at the shock of the sinking ship, and, with one common emotion, all had started for the door. But the waters of the sea had been too swift for them. Lo! then—some wildly grasping the table, others the beams, others the sides of the cabin—there they all stood. Near the door was a crowd of people, heaped upon one another—some on the floor, others rushing over them—all seeking madly to gain the outlet. There was one who sought to clamber over the table, and still was there holding on to an iron post. So strong was each convulsive grasp, so fierce the struggle of each with death, that their hold had not yet been relaxed, but each one stood and looked frantically to the door.

To the door—good God! To me they were looking! They were glancing at me, all those dreadful, those terrible eyes! Eyes in which the fire of life had been displaced by the chilling gleam of death. Eyes which still glared like the eyes of the maniac, with no expression. They froze me with their cold and icy stare. They had no meaning for the soul had gone. And this made it still more horrible than it could have been in life; for the appalling contortion of their faces, expressing fear, horror, despair, and whatever else the human soul may feel, contrasting with the cold and glassy eyes, made their vacancy yet more fearful. He upon the table seemed more fiendish than the others; for his long black hair was disheveled, and floated horribly down—and his beard and moustache, all loosened by the water, gave him the grimness of a demon. Oh, what woe and torture! what unutterable agonies appeared in the despairing glance of those faces—faces twisted into spasmodic contortions, while the souls that lighted them were writhing and struggling for life.

I heeded not the dangerous sea which, even when we touched the steamer, had slightly rolled. Down in these awful depths the swell would not be very strong, unless it should increase with ten fold fury above. But it had been increasing, though I had not noticed it, and the motion of the water began to be felt in these abysses. Suddenly the steamer was shaken and rocked by the swell.

At this the hideous forms were shaken and tell. The heaps of people rolled assunder. That demon on the table seemed to make a spring directly towards me. I fled, shrieking—all were after me, I thought. I rushed out, with no purpose but to escape. I sought to throw off my weights and rise.

My weights could not be loosened—I pulled at them with frantic exertions, but they could not loosen them. The iron fastenings had grown stiff. One of them I wrested off in my convulsive efforts, but the other still kept me down. The tube, also, was lying down still in my passage way through the machine rooms. I did not know this until I had exhausted my strength, and almost my hope, in vain efforts to loosen the weight, and still the horror of that scene in the cabin rested upon me.

Where was Rimmer? The thought flashed across me. He was not here. He had returned. Two weights lay near which seemed thrown off in terrible haste. Yes, Rimmer had gone. I looked up; there lay the boat, tossing and rolling among the waves.

I rushed down into the machine room, to go back, so as to loosen my tube. I had gone through the passages carelessly, and this lay there, for it was unrolled from above as I went on. I went back in haste to extricate myself; I could stay here no longer; for if all the gold of Colocanda was in the vessel, I would not stay in company with the dreadful dead.

Back—fear lent wings to my feet. I hurried down the stairs, into the lower hold once more, and retraced my steps through the passages below. I walked back to the place into which I had first descended. It was dark; a new feeling of horror shot through me? I looked up; the aperture was closed!

Heavens! was it closed by mortal hand? Had Rimmer in his panic flight blindly thrown down the trap door, which I now remembered to have seen open when I descended? or had some fearful being from the cabin—that demon who had sprung towards me—?

I started back in terror.

But I could not wait here; I must escape from this den of horrors. I sprang up the ladder, and tried to raise the door. It resisted my efforts; I put my helmeted head against it, and tried to raise it; the rung of the ladder broke beneath me, but the door was not raised; my tube came down through and kept it partly open, for it was a strong tube, and kept strongly expanded by close wound wire.

I seized a bar of iron and tried to pry it up; I raised it slightly, but there was no way to get it up further. I looked around, and found some blocks; with these I raised the heavy door, little by little, placing a block in, to keep what I had gained. But the work was slow and laborious, and I had worked a long while before I had raised it four inches.

The sea rolled more and more. The submerged vessel felt its power, and rocked. Suddenly it wheeled over, and lay upon its side. I ran around to get on the deck above, to try and lift up the door. But when I came to the other outlet I knew it was impossible; for the tube would not permit me to go so far, and then I would rather have died a thousand deaths than to have ventured again so near the cabin.

I returned to the fallen door; I sat down in despair and waited for death. I saw no hope of escape. This then was to be my end.

But the steamer gave a sudden lurch, again acted upon by the power of the waves. She had been balanced upon a rock, in such a way that a slight action of the water was sufficient to tip her over.

She creaked, and groaned, and labored, and then she turned upon her side.

I rose, I clung to the ladder, I pressed the trap door open, while the steamer lay with her deck perpendicular to the ground. I sprang out and touched the bottom of the sea. It was a good time; for a moment after the mass went over back again.

Then with a last effort, I twisted the iron fastening off the weight which kept me down—I jerked it. It was loosed, it broke, it fell. In a moment I began to ascend, and in a few minutes I was floating on the water—for the air which is pressed down for the divers consumption constitutes a buoyant mass, which raises him to the sea.

Thanks to heaven! There was the strong boat, with my bold, brave men! They felt me rising; they saw me, and came and saved me. Rimmer had fled from the horrid scene, when I entered the cabin, but remained in the boat to lend his aid. He never went down again, but became a sea captain. As for me, I still go down, but only to vessels whose crews have been saved.

It is needless to say that the Marmon was never again visited.

A Texas Joker.

Some years ago we copied the following sterling bit of fun from the Texas "Morning Star," published at Houston. It lately fell in our way again, and we were so tickled upon reading it again that we determined to start it for a second heat. We will take no small odds that in three months time it will have been published in half the newspapers in the country:

AQUATIC SCENERY.

During the hardest of the storm, the day before yesterday, we took a lounge down to the steamboat landing. While standing on the brink of a deep gully that emptied its torrent of water into the bayou, our attention was attracted to the bottom of the gully, where a drunken loafer was steaming the torrent and holding on to a root fast anchored in the bank. The poor fellow not knowing any one was near him, was combatting his fate manfully, and in calculating his chances of escape gave utterance to the following:

"Hayn't this a orful sivation to be placed in, nollow? If I was a steamboat, a rail, or a wood pile, I'd be better worth fifty cents on the dollar than I'll ever be again. Unless I'm a gone case now, there laynt any truth in phrenology. I've weighed all the chances now like a general, and only two that bears in my favor; the first is a skunk hole to crawl into, and the second a special interposition of Providence; and the best chance of the two is so slim, if I only had the chance I'd give the premium for the skunk hole—their's my sentiments. If I could be a mink, or a muskrat, or a water snake, for about two minutes' perhaps I would mount the first step of the side of Bio, and flap my wings and crow over precious life, scientifically preserved. But what's the use holding on to this root? There hayn't no skunk hole in these diggins—the water is getting taller about a foot, and if my nose was as long as infinity it wouldn't stick out much longer.

"O, Jerry, Jerry, you're a gone sucker, and I guess your marm don't know your're out; poor woman! won't she cry the glasses out of her spectacles when she hears that her dapple Jerry has got the whole of the Buffer to Bio for his coffin? What a pity 'tis some philanthropic, or member of the humane society, never had foresight enough to build a house across this gutter, with a steam engine to keep out the water! If they had done it in time, they might have had the honor and gratification of saving the life of a feller being; but it is all day with you, Jerry! and a big harbor to anchor in. It's too bad to go off in this orful manner, when they know I ollers hated water ever since I was big enough to know 'twant whiskey."

Before Jerry got to the conclusion he was washed into the bayou, within a few feet of a large flat, that had just started for the steamboat. His eye caught the prospect of deliverance, and he changed the burden of his dirge into a thrilling cry of "heave ho! passenger overboard and sinking with a belt full of specie!—the man who saves me makes his fortune! Jerry was fished out by a darkey, and to show his gratitude invited Quashy to "go up to the groggery and liquor."

LOOK OUT FOR Slop Clothing.

Do not buy slop work when you can get Custom Made Clothing at about the same price; how much nearer a suit of Clothes look when made to order; and what is more agreeable and beautiful than

A WELL FITTING GARMENT.

The undersigned would give notice to his friends and the public that he is now ready to introduce the

FASHIONS FOR GENTLEMEN'S DRESS FOR THE

Spring and Summer of 1856

No pains has been spared to procure the best novelties in Pantaloons, Vest and Coat Stuffs, from the most celebrated fabricators of Gentlemen's Dress Goods in Europe and America.

It gives me pleasure to say that the styles for the coming season are more in accordance with good taste, than any goods which have been presented for several years.

Also—A good assortment of Youth's and Children's Garments, a large variety of HATS AND CAPS

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS FOR SALE CHEAP.

Giving personal attention to the cutting department, garments will be warranted to give general satisfaction.

All who wish good garments, cheap for cash, are invited to call and examine my assortment before purchasing elsewhere. D. D. RING, Opposite the Orthodox Church, Quincy, April 26.

New Tailoring Goods.

WOULD inform the inhabitants of Quincy and vicinity, that he has Just replenished his Stock, with a choice selection of Goods, suitable for

SPRING and SUMMER

He invites the attention of such as expect punctuality and good workmanship, for cash only, such being his rule of business, and the reduced rates at which he sells, rendering any other mode of doing business impracticable.

His clothes will always be made with all his care and skill, of which he boasts not; leaving the garments made by his hands to ADVERTISE THEMSELVES. Those sundries to combine elegance with economy, will do well and wisely to favor him with a call.

Remember he is not to be undersold by any other establishment, style, quality and finish considered. Quincy, April 21.

New Arrangement—Cash Sales.

THE Subscriber respectfully informs his patrons and the public, that he is convinced that the time for large profits on small sales has passed, and that the only sure way to succeed is to sell a

Large Quantity of Goods

—AT A—VERY SMALL ADVANCE FOR CASH, AND CASH ONLY.

I have now adopted this principle by which I am enabled to increase my sales so that a small percentage makes my profit equal to those who sell a few goods at exorbitant prices.

Being aware that I am entirely dependent upon the favor of the public, purchasers may depend upon being treated in the most gentlemanly manner and receiving goods that will prove precisely as represented.

A large and superior Assortment —OF—

Seasonable GOODS!

Are now offered, and I am constantly receiving from the best manufacturers in the State, to which the attention of all is invited.

Poetry.

Don't Shoot the Birds.

Don't shoot the birds, the warbling birds.
That cheer you with their song,
That fill the air with melodies,
A bright and happy throng;
That carol forth their matin lays,
From shrub and leafy bough,
And gaily sing their tuneful strains
From morn till evening dim.

Don't shoot the birds, the joyous birds,
That charm the travelers' way;
That nestle round the poor man's cot,
And princely mansion gay;
Whose merry notes so blithe and free,
They chant alike for all
And ask you do not want,
E'en but a pittance small.

Don't shoot the birds, the harmless birds,
That come with buds and flowers,
That soothe the farmer's weary toil,
Through summer's sultry hours;
That build their nests and brood their young,
Beside your cottage door,
And linger near from early spring,
Till autumn's golden store.

Don't shoot the birds, the sportive birds,
That flit o'er hill and plain,
That leave when chilly winter comes,
But soon return again;
That warble out their lays of praise,
With many a gleeful voice,
Which calm the daily cares of life,
And bids the heart rejoice.

The Lords of Land and Money.

Sons of Old England, from the sod,
Uplift the noble lance;
Gold spears a mightier power than God,
And wealth is worship now.
In all those toll-enrolled lands
Ye have no heritage;
They snatch the fruit of youthful hands,
The stuff from every age.

These Lords of Land and Money!
The lords of promise, blood,
They shall not kill the poor life here,
To rob them of Life's honey.

Three long dark years of blood and tears,
We've told a tale of blood and tears,
Till Wren's red hand hath made a land
Of paupers, prisons, graves;
But our long-enduring faith now
Within the souls of men
The lords of promise, blood,
O tell them in their Palaces,
These Lords of Land and Money!
They shall not kill the poor life here,
To rob them of Life's honey.

May.

I feel a newer life in every day;
The winds that fan the flowers,
And with their welcome breathings fill the soil
Tell of summer hours—
Of hours that glide swift away,
Beneath the sky of May.

The spirit of the gentle south wind calls,
From his blue throne of air;
And where his whispering voice in music falls,
Beauty is budding there.
The bright ones of the valley break
Their slumbers and awake.

The waving verdure rolls along the plain,
And the wide furrows wait,
To welcome back to the playful mates again,
Its canopy of leaves;
And from its darkening shadow floats,
A gust of treasuring notes.

Anecdotes.

"Amanda, does George kiss you because he loves you?" inquires little Jacky of his mother.

"To be sure, sonny—why?"
"Well, I guess he loves the kitchen girl, too, for I seen him kiss her mo'n' forty times
last Sunday when you was to meeting."

"I wish you would not smoke cigars," said a plump little black-eyed girl to her lover.

"Why may I not as well smoke as your chimney?"
"Because the chimneys don't smoke when they are in good order."

A French master, going on horseback to teach at an academy for ladies, was thrown off his horse into a ditch. When he made his appearance before the mistress, in order to apologize for the dirt which besmeared his habilliments, he said, "Ah, Madame, I have fallen into the ditch!"

Oui, Monsieur, I see it; you are covered with the gruy.

A young lady of delicate constitution, who was recommended to exercise for her health, replied, "I will jump at an offer of marriage, and run my own risk, if that kind of exercise will do."

A philosopher who had married a vulgar
but amiable girl, used to call her "Brown Sugar," because, he said, she was sweet but unrefined.

A mother was recently expostulating with a girl of ten years about some impropriety of dress. "Why, Mamma, how can you be expected to know, when your old-fashioned notions?"
queried the juvenile. "Now, I am constantly in society, and I assure you the young ladies all dress in this manner."

Mc. Eckron's

CELEBRATED LINIMENT.

Equally Good for MAN or BEAST!
HAS triumphed where all other external applications have failed to have any beneficial effect. It is justly acknowledged to be the greatest EXTERNAL REMEDY in the world, and its sale is unsurpassed in the annals of medicine. It cures most other popular medicines of the day, it is used and recommended by many eminent members of the Medical Faculty; its prejudices having yielded to the many indisputable demonstrations of cures it has performed where all other remedies have failed.

Hundreds of certificates might be given showing almost unbroken cures in cases of Rheumatism—Neuralgia—Spinal Complaints, &c., and in Bruises, Burns, Flesh Wounds of all kinds, old Sores, Sprains, Broken Bones, dislocations, &c., &c.—but a FAIR TRIAL is all that is required to convince the most skeptical of its merits. See Circulars.

Prepared by J. S. & J. E. SELDEN, Haddam, Conn., and sold by druggists throughout the
U. S. and Canada.

friends have realized marked benefits from them, and my experience has led me to believe that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effective, but safe and pleasant to the public, qualities which must make them valued by the public,
when they are known."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Baltimore, 15th April, 1854:

"Dr. J. C. Ayer—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which has for years overtaken me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with unfailing success. You make medicines which cure, and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co.,
says:

"Sir: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material
benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will procure them."

The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of West-
worth, N. H., writes:

"Having used your CATHARTIC PILLS in my practice, I certify from experience that they are an invaluable purgative. In cases of disordered functions of the liver, causing headache, indigestion, costiveness, and the great variety of diseases that follow, they are a sure remedy than any other. In all cases where a purgative is required, I commend them to the public. They are of a pleasant taste, superior to any other I have ever found. They are sure in their operation, and perfectly safe—qualities which have made them an invaluable article for public use. I have used them for many years known your Cherry Pectoral as the best cough medicine in the world; and these Pills are in no degree inferior to that admirable preparation for the treatment of diseases."

"Dr. J. C. Ayer—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted from my birth with catarrh in its worst form, and now, after twenty years' trial, and an untold amount of suffering, I have been completely cured in a few weeks by your Pills.
With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be imagined when you realize what I have suffered, and how
I am now feeling."

"Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in any shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and discharge from the nostrils, besides the unendurable pain; and it settled in the scalp of my head, and destroyed my hair, and has kept me nearly blind all my days; sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months a raw sore.
About one week ago I commenced taking your Cathartic Pills, and now an entirely new man I am. My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair has commenced growing again; all of which makes me feel already a new person."

"Hoping this statement may be the means of conveying information to all who are afflicted with this disease,
I am, Sir, very respectfully,
Yours, &c.,
MARIA RICKER."

I have known the above named Maria Ricker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.

Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co., Capt. JOEL PRATT, of the ship Mariner, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I had failed of any relief by my Physician quantities, chew and smoke it without limit. It constitutes the third in value in the list of commodities which the country has to spare. Yet we export only $11,319,319 in value of this article yearly, and last year we received in return, tea and coffee amounting in round numbers to $24,000,000. Even in narcotics the balance of trade is largely against us. Bacon, lard and live hogs are not unimportant items in our commerce; yet we send abroad only enough of these to buy the linen we wear. But "cotton is king." That wipes out the pecuniary effects of the follies and extravagances which all have conspired to commit. Of that we sent out last year ship-loads enough to swell the aggregate value of the export to $109,456,000, an amount greater than the value of all the other exports, specie included. —Chicago Tribune.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, May 17th, 1856.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Mount Wollaston Temperance Guards.

Under the above imposing title, our young people have formed a Temperance Society, which from present appearances bids fair to render timely aid in the great work of moral reform which is now going on.

Since the first steps taken in this important movement by the "Quincy Temperance Union," (whose organization dates back only a few weeks,) over one thousand true and efficient members have joined its ranks, pledging themselves in the bonds of union and sympathy, to use their best endeavors to arrest the pestilential influence which the too free indulgence in intoxicating liquors are producing upon the health, morals and social condition of the people.

Under these auspices we hail with pleasure this new auxiliary to the Temperance Cause. May the "Mount Wollaston Guards," enjoy a bright and successful career; may they be ever vigilant and watchful over the interests of that cause which they have so nobly espoused. Guarding with a jealous care their rights as moral and responsible agents.

Our young friends, we are aware, may not, like their elder brothers, have to wrestle with old established habits; their duty will be a plainer one,—to watch over the besetting vices and temptations which lie scattered in their path, and to rise above their fascinating influence.

"As the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined." Is a precept, inculcating the idea that we are the sole architects of our characters, either for weal or woe. An admonition to the young of the importance of bringing their appetites and inclinations under proper and wholesome restraints. At the last meeting of this Society, (which are now held weekly) the following Resolves were passed, and as they define their principles in so clear and lucid a manner, we thought we could not serve the cause more effectually than by transferring them to our columns.

Resolved, That in view of the happy results which have already followed the labors of the "Mount Wollaston Temperance Guards," and of the work which it aims to perform, we have strong encouragement to hope, with Divine aid, greater success will attend our efforts.

Resolved, That it is with sorrow and regret, that we behold those who would be of untold benefits to the Temperance Cause, stand aloof from us, when with their voice and hand, we might almost sweep this scourge of intemperance from our midst:

Resolved, That between temperance and intemperance, there is no middle ground to stand upon: that total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the only safe and true ground, and that all who are not for this movement practically and actively, are against us, and the cause we advocate.

Resolved, With all due deference and respect to those who occasionally indulge in a glass, yet we candidly believe, that the influence of such persons in their examples, is far more pernicious, than that of the confirmed inebriate.

Resolved, That we believe these principles to be vital for the maintenance of good society, peace and happiness, and therefore we invite all lovers of morality and good order, to unite with us, for the perpetuation of the inestimable blessings of Total Abstinence.

NIAGARA ENGINE COMPANY. At the annual meeting of the Niagara Engine Company, held on the 5th inst., the following gentlemen were chosen Officers for the year ensuing.

Foreman—Charles N. Hunt.
First Assistant—Edward B. Souther.
Clerk—Warren A. Bent.

Leading Hosemen—John T. Ripley, Francis L. Souther, Francis W. French, William Faxon, Perez Chubbuck, Jr., and Charles P. Smith.

Section Hosemen—George Derry, Isaac Bass, George Russell, and Enoch Lathrop.
Standing Committee—W. M. French, F. A. Lapham, and N. Q. Pope.

For the Patriot.
Boston Correspondence.

State Legislature still in clover.—Prospects of a long Session.—All sorts of news from Washington.—Quasi war in Kansas.—Governor Robinson a prisoner.—The people in arms.—Boston and New York ships in the Baltic or White Sea Trade.—Hypocrisy of Northern merchants on Slavery.

The Massachusetts Legislature is still in Session, and likely to continue so, for a couple of weeks more. The Orders of the Day in the House of Representatives, which are printed daily and circulated among the Members, embrace nearly one hundred and twenty different matters to be yet acted upon; many of them, quite debatable. At the close of the Session, I will endeavor to notice some of the general Acts, passed in 1856.

We are continually receiving interesting intelligence from Washington. The President's Cabinet, had a meeting on Tuesday to consider the question of the recognition of General Walker's government, as President of Nicaragua. It is now stated that General Pierce has assured several of his friends, that if the next intelligence from Nicaragua shows that Walker is sustaining himself, that his government will at once be recognized. Things look very squally at the present moment in Central America.

It is now said the British fleet in the Gulf of Mexico, have no orders to interfere with General Walker or his men at all. It is thought possible that the French may do so. A Frenchman, says the correspondent of the New York Herald, named "Morie," who was concerned with Flores in the Ecuador revolution, has been in Paris all winter, urging the government to put down Walker, whom he represents as a robber and murderer. A German Baron, Bulow, has been the principal agent in forcing Costa Rica in this war. More foreign interference.

Mr. Marcy has just received from Mr. Dallas in England, Lord Clarendon's long expected reply to the despatch of December 22, 1856—Marcy to Buchanan, calling on the British Government to recall Crampton and Consul Barclay Rinecroft and Mathers. Clarendon replies that the British Government declines to recall the Minister and the Consul. Crampton was called upon for his justification in regard to the charges made against him. His reply, a long one, was very bitter against Stroebel, and other persons with whom he was mixed up. So much for Washington gossip.

If we turn our attention to Kansas, we behold there a fearful picture. The people are on the threshold of civil war. It appears the bogus "Governor" Robinson, deemed it prudent to leave Kansas in a hurry with his family, but was arrested or detained at Lexington, Missouri, by a committee of the citizens, and notified that they should detain him on the ground that he was fleeing from the Territory to avoid arrest on an indictment of treason, which had been found against him by the Grand Jury of the United States District Court. "Governor" Robinson was, however, treated with respect. People were in arms in that unhappy Territory, resisting the action or authority of the Federal Government. These things cannot long continue, and the most serious consequences are apprehended.

Among other things that are now before Congress, is the "Coolie Trade," which you know, is kidnapping the lowest or poorest class of Chinese, precisely on the principle of the African Slave Trade, and transporting these poor Celestials from China to Cuba, to be sold as slaves. These poor creatures are bought in China from fifteen to twenty dollars per man and sold in Cuba at two hundred and fifty dollars each. Like the poor negroes of Africa, they are torn violently from parents and friends and carried by hundreds and thousands in a crowded condition on ship-board to the West Indies, and during the long voyage to America, of eighty days, are supplied with the smallest quantity of food to sustain life. Recollect that these are whites, not negroes, and most of the ships engaged in this trade are owned in Boston or New York; those patriotic localities, where anti-Slavery sentiments are so dearly professed. Out with such hypocrisy.

INTELLIGENCE OFFICE. N. B. Farnall of this town, is about to open an Intelligence and General Agency Office, at his store, on Washington street. Properly conducted, it will be of great advantage to this and the neighboring towns. Persons wanting help, and those desiring employment, will, by calling on Mr. F. be enabled to suit themselves, and also relieved of the disagreeable task of visiting Boston, oftentimes to become the dupes of dishonest and mercenary men. Mr. Farnall is well known in this community, and all who deal with him may rest assured their wants will be faithfully and promptly attended to. The town needs such an establishment, and Mr. F. cannot be otherwise than successful in this undertaking.

MYER'S CIRCUS. One week from to-day recollect, this splendid troupe of Equestrian performers will give their first exhibition in this place. The reputation of this troupe guarantees a rich treat for our citizens.

Notices of New Publications.

LINDA; or the Young Pilot of the Belle Creole. This interesting story by Mrs. CAROLINE LEE HENTZ, is well worthy perusal. The characters are exceedingly well drawn—the tale is one of deep interest and is exquisitely told. The reputation of the gifted authoress (now no more) is a sufficient guaranty of the truthful and moral tone of the work. It is published by Peterson of Philadelphia, and on the first day of June next it will be for sale. A very large edition has been ordered.

AMBITION; is the title of a well written volume that has been resting on our editorial table for several days. We have perused it carefully, and was much interested in its well-drawn scenes and characters. The purpose of the volume is well shown in the history of Herbert, and his pursuit after fame; which, when acquired, was to him like the apples of the Dead Sea—though fair to view were bitter to the taste. It will richly repay perusal. Published by James French & Co., Boston; a firm well known as the patrons of merit and whose publications are noted for the perfect accuracy and exquisite style in which they are placed before the reading world.

SEA-BEARD SLAVE STATES. This work is published by Dix & Edwards, New York. It is written in an easy and familiar style, but not without its blemishes. The author is an Englishman; with English prejudices and feelings. The American reader, therefore, must receive his statements with caution. These works are for sale at the Quincy Bookstore.

YOUR LAST CHANCE. The gorgeous spectacle of Shakespeare's Midsummer's Night Dream, produced at the Boston Theatre for a succession of nights to crowded houses, is to be withdrawn after to-day to make room for other novelties. Those of our citizens who have not witnessed its representation, should avail themselves of this, their only opportunity. It will be a long time before another piece possessing such unrivalled beauties will be brought forward. The cars leave precisely at 12.

THE ADAMS LITERARY ASSOCIATION. The meetings of this Association will be discontinued until the first Monday in July; of which due notice will be given, as it is the annual meeting for the choice of officers.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.
A mine containing thirteen different colors of paints has recently been discovered in Montgomery County, (Ga.) The deposits yield sixty per cent.

Europe has been depleted of nearly a million of her population during the past two years of her war.

The Seneca Indians have a law to the effect that no treaty is valid without the consent of two-thirds of the mothers of the tribe.

About six times the usual amount of winter wheat, it is said, has been sown in Western Missouri this year.

There is an oak tree near Raleigh, (N. C.) which, at the sun's meridian, covers with shade a space of nine thousand square feet. It would afford shelter for forty-five hundred men.

A man has been fined one thousand dollars, and forfeited six slaves, at New Orleans, for selling them in such a manner as to separate mother and child, contrary to the laws of Louisiana.

The New York papers announce the death of Ogden Hoffman, well known throughout the country as one of the most able and eloquent advocates at the New York Bar. He was distinguished for his power as a public speaker, and has filled several public stations.

The rose of Florida, the most beautiful of flowers, emits no fragrance; the bird of Paradise, the most beautiful of birds, gives no song; the cypress of Greece, the finest of trees, yields no fruit.

The limb of a peach tree which had been buried all winter in snow, in Northampton, (Mass.) was found full of fruit buds, while the rest of the tree, having been exposed to the weather, has none.

There are now not less than thirty-two thousand miles of telegraph wire intersecting the United States—more than enough to "belt the earth."

J. G. Percival, the poet and geologist, died at Hazelgreen, (Ill.) on the 2d inst.

A little boy died in Bangor, (Me.) from the effects of using an old tobacco pipe to blow soap bubbles with.

Accounts from all parts of New Jersey agree in stating that the prospects of a large yield of peaches were never better than at present.

Dr. John C. Warren died at his residence, in Boston, on the 4th inst., in the eightieth year of his age. For more than half a century he has stood at the head of the surgery in New England, and in addition to a most laborious private and hospital practice, was a most faithful and thorough teacher of anatomy and surgery.

The Boston Telegraph states that Gen. Fisher A. Kingsbury of Weymouth, whose office has been twice blown up, has received several anonymous letters threatening him with dire vengeance unless he abandons liquor prosecutions.

THE VARNISH MANUFACTURE. The manufacture of Varnish creates an immense branch of industry. Copal is imported from Africa, and the lac gums from Asia, by our own merchants, and more largely still by those of quiet old Salem. Till within a few years, but a small portion, comparatively, of the precious gums have been manufactured in this neighborhood, as we might suppose, but in New York or its vicinity, whence they are brought back in the shape of varnish to be spread all over the world by our New England manufacturers of furniture, carriages and pianos.

As New York and its neighborhood cannot be more impervious or exclusive than Japan, it is hard to see why there should not, in time be a "cut-off" to this roundabout business, were it only to save transportation.

An inspection of the out-of-town varnish factory of Messrs. Stinson, Valentine & Co., of 55 Broad street, inclines us to the belief that this will soon be the case, and that even our piano-forte makers will, ere many months, no more think of sending to New York or Newark for varnish, than they now do of importing their wire from Birmingham. The enterprising firm above named have just added improved and expensive apparatus, which excels anything heretofore used in this stock, in its saving of labor, fuel and vitality, and the ease and safety with which the heat is applied and regulated. One of the most skillful of Newark varnish makers is their foreman. With facilities in all respects equal, and in some manifestly superior to those of any manufacturers in the country and an almost unlimited capacity for producing all the varieties of varnish in use among us, we think they cannot but be successful in domesticating, or "re-annexing" a branch of industry which fairly belongs to the old Bay State. —Boston Traveller.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 5th inst., William, son of Mr. Patrick Walsh, aged 1 year and 9 months.

On the 8th inst., Isabel, daughter of Mr. John and Mrs. Sarah Ellison, aged 2 years and 6 months.

At East Cambridge, on the 3d inst. Mrs. Lydia E. daughter of Mr. George and Mrs. Lydia M. Langham, aged 1 year and 3 days. At Pettaquamscutt, on the 10th inst., Daniel W., son of Mr. John M. and Mrs. Mary B. Cleverly, aged 3 years and 5 months.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT.

For Wood, Brick and Iron Buildings, Steam and Canal Boats Railroad Cars, &c. &c. Or, for all kinds of work above and under water. Perfectly spark and cinder Proof on roofs of Houses, Decks of Steamers, Railroad and other Bridges.

NEW YORK, DEC. 24th, 1856.

WE have examined this Paint chemically and pronounce it to be one of those pigments that form a chemical unity with Linseed Oil; that is, the oil and the pigment unite and form a durable compound.

This is not the case with many paints now in use; hence their short duration, when exposed to moisture, light and heat.

For example paints manufactured from metallic basis (the direct oxide of copper excepted) are not durable because they only mix mechanically with oil.

But all mineral paints constructed chemically as the Bridgewater pigment, are permanent, because there is an affinity between them and the oil in which they are mixed.

The durability of a paint, therefore depends upon the nature and nicety of its parts, in being so related to each other, that they have an affinity in themselves, and being negative to the oil in which they are mixed.

The analysis of the Bridgewater Paint is proof of such a condition; then as we have said above, it is a paint to be depended upon for its durability.

These facts are based upon experiment and practical experience, not of a few days only, but upon experience of hard study and hard labor for the past thirty-six years.

Lastly, the universal satisfaction given by the Bridgewater Paint, to those who use it, is good proof of what we have herein stated.

Respectfully submitted,
[Signed.]

A WELL FITTING GARMENT.

The undersigned would give notice to his friends and the public that he is now ready to introduce the

FASHIONS FOR GENTLEMEN'S DRESS

FOR THE

Spring and Summer of 1856

No pains has been spared to procure the best novelties in Pantaloons, Vest and Coat Stuffs, from the most celebrated fabricators of Gentlemen's Dress Goods in Europe and America.

It gives me pleasure to say that the styles for the coming season are more in accordance with good taste, than any goods which have been presented for several years.

Also a good assortment of

Youths' and Children's Garments,

a large variety of

HATS AND CAPS

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Giving personal attention to the fitting department, garments will be warranted to give general satisfaction.

All who wish good garments, cheap for cash, are invited to call and examine my assortment before purchasing elsewhere.

New Tailoring Goods.

J. A. HODEN,

WOULD inform the inhabitants of Quincy and vicinity, that he has

Just replenished his Stock,

with a choice selection of Goods, suitable for

SPRING and SUMMER

He invites the attention of such as expect punctuality and good workmanship, for each only, such being his rule of business, and the reduced rates at which he sells, rendering any other mode of doing business impracticable.

His clothes will always be made with all his care and skill, of which he boasts not; leaving the garments made by his hands to ADVISE THEMSELVES. Those students to combine elegance with economy, will do well and wisely to favor him with a call.

Remember he is not to be undersold by any other establishment, style, quality and finish considered.

Poetry.

The Pendulum.

On the silent dome of Darkness
Sits the Midnight, like a Queen;
In her crown are flashing planets;
On her robe the starry sheen.
I am looking from my window
Along the vale below,
But listening to the Pendulum
Swinging to and fro.

There is not another whisper
In the room or on the hill,
While I muse within my chamber—
In my chamber dim and still;
And my ears cannot forget it,
The clock seems talking so,
While tick 'tack! goes the Pendulum,
Still swinging to and fro.

Now the silver voice of childhood;
Now the trembling voice of years,
From the clock within the corner
Seem to fascinate my ears;
And the choir of ghostly echoes
Still answer, loud or low,
To yonder noisy Pendulum
A swinging to and fro.

How it grows upon the silence!
Seems to echo in the sky,
Till the multiplying voices
Call up spectres to my eye.
From the fireless red rim Phantoms,
In garments white as snow,
While ticking goes the Pendulum,
Still swinging to and fro.

All those dear ones have arisen,
With each sweet familiar mien;
And the past, like moving pictures,
Rolls along the sacred scene.
Living is it, bright and blissful,
That seemed so long ago,
When tick 'tack! thus, the Pendulum
Went swinging to and fro.

Like the golden hues of sunset,
Or the purple flush of dawn,
Youth and age, in fleet succession,
Stay an instant—and are gone!
Thus are homes forever changing,
In gladness or in woe,
While swings the restless Pendulum,
At-ticking to and fro.

Some are blooming in the circle,
Bright as meadows full of flowers;
Others, like advancing winter,
Herald dreary weeping hours.
While in dark and sad processions,
O'er mournful fields they go,
The never ceasing Pendulum
Swings, ticking to and fro.

Seven in number were the Phantoms,
Six have passed beyond the scene;
And the lone one, bowed with sorrow,
Wanders still by grave-mounds green.
But he ne'er shall meet his kindred
Through all the world below,
Where still the warning Pendulum
Goes swinging to and fro.

Sinks the flame upon the hearth-stone,
Die the embers with a sigh;
And the shining Phantoms vanish
From my chamber dark and lone.
They have faded from my vision,
Like stars in morning glow;
But swinging still the Pendulum
Goes ticking to and fro.

Pale the waning moon is sinking
On the dimly-silvered West;
And my wearied hopes are fainting
In my lone and dreary breast.
Like a dark and winding river,
Life's heavy years most flow;
While ever thus the Pendulum
Is swinging to and fro.

Anecdotes.

The subject of impressions at first sight was being talked over at the supper table, when the lady who presided, "O'er the cups and tea," said she always formed an idea of a person at first sight, and generally found it to be correct.

"Mamma," said her youngest son, in a shrill voice that attracted the attention of all present, "what is it?"

"I want to know," said Young America, "what was your opinion of me when you first saw me?"

"Sam, is my coffee hot?" cried an old bachelor to his servant.

"I guess not yet, massa—I spit in him, and he no sizzle," replied Sam.

A boy of little children were telling their father what they got at school. The eldest got grammar, geography, arithmetic, etc. The next got reading, spelling and definitions.

"And what do you get, my little soldier?" said the father to a gray-checked little fellow who was at that moment sily driving a ten-penny nail into a door panel.

"Me?—oh, I gets readin', spellin', and spankings."

A jolly old darkey out South bought himself a new shiny hat, and when it commenced raining, he put it under his coat. When asked why he did not keep his hat on his head, he replied,

"De hat's mine; I bought him wid my own money; head 'longs to massa, let him take kee he own property. Yeh, ya—h!"

A young man having lost his watch key and being weary of looking for it remarked that he supposed that it had gone to h—l, by this time. Well, observed his grandfather who was near by, be contented for you will be quite likely to find it again.

A boy at school in the West, when called upon to recite his lesson in history, was asked,

Quincy, Dec. 3d.

Mc. Eckron's CELEBRATED LINIMENT.

Equally Good for MAN or BEAST!

HAS triumphed where all other external applications have failed to have any beneficial effect. It is justly acknowledged to be the greatest EXTERNAL REMEDY in the world, and its use is unsurpassed in the annals of medicine. Unlike most other popular medicines of the day, it is used and recommended by many eminent members of the Medical Faculty; their prejudices having yielded to the many indisputable demonstrations of cures it has performed where all other remedies have failed.

Hundreds of certificates might be given showing almost unnumbered cures in cases of Rheumatism—Neuralgia—Spinal Complaints, &c., and in Bruises, Burns, Flesh Wounds of all kinds, old Sores, Sprains, Broken Bones, dislocations, &c., &c.—but a FAIR TRIAL is all that is required to convince the most skeptical of its merits. See Circulars.

Prepared by J. S. & J. E. SELDEN, Haddam, Conn., and sold by druggists throughout the U. S. and Canada.

AYER'S PILLS

Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULIUS HAUER, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose choice products are found at almost every toilet, says:

"I am happy to say of your CATARRHIC PILLS, that I have found them a better family medicine, for common use, than any other within my knowledge. Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and coincide with me in believing that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effectual, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which must make them valued by the public, when they are known."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Baltimore, 15th April, 1854:

"Dr. J. C. AYER—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which one of late years has broken me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with untiring success. I make medicines which cure; and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co., says:

"Pa. R. R. Office, Philadelphia, Dec. 13, 1853. "Sir: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will procure them."

The highly renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of Westworth, N. H., writes:

"Having used your CATARRHIC PILLS in my practice, I certify from experience that they are an invaluable purgative. In cases of disordered functions of the liver, and the great variety of diseases that follow, they are a sure remedy than any other. In all cases where a purgative remedy is required, I confidently recommend these Pills to the public, as superior to any other I have ever found. They are sure in their operation, and perfectly safe—qualities which make them an invaluable article for public use. I have for many years known your Cherry Pectoral as the best Cough medicine in the world; and these Pills are in no wise inferior to that admirable preparation for the treatment of diseases."

Dr. J. C. AYER—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted from my birth with scrofula in its worst form, and now, after twenty years' trial, and an untold amount of suffering, have been completely cured in a few weeks by your Pills. With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be imagined when you realize what I have suffered, and how long.

"Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and made me almost blind, besides the unendurable pain at others it settled in the scalp of my head, and destroyed my hair, and has kept me partly bald all my days; sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months a raw sore. About nine weeks ago I commenced taking your Cathartic Pills, and now an entirely free from the complaint. My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair has commenced a healthy growth; all of which makes me feel already a new person.

"Hoping this statement may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours, &c., MARIA RICKER."

I have known the above named Maria Ricker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true. Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufactory, &c.

Capt. JOEL PRATT, of the ship Marion, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I had failed of any relief by my Physician, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have given them to my children for worms, with the best effects. They were promptly cured. I recommended them to a friend for colic, which he had trouble with for some months; he told me in a few days they had cured him. You make the best medicine in the world; and I am free to say so."

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known, not only in this but the neighboring States.

"New Orleans, 26th April, 1854. "Sir: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and family have been very much benefited by your medicines. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous cough, by your CHERRY PECTORAL, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have several times been cured from attacks of whooping cough and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. Your Cathartic Pills have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and colic, which I have grown upon me for some years;—indeed, this cure is much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best Physicians which this section of the country affords, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken.

"You seem to me, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you may well suppose we are not ungrateful of it. Yours respectfully, LEAVITT THAXTER."

"Senate Chamber, Ohio, April 5th, 1854. "Dr. J. C. AYER—Honored Sir: I have made a thorough trial of the Cathartic Pills, left me by your agent, and have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism, under which he found me suffering. The first dose relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel in better health now than for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your Cathartic Pills. Yours with great respect, LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons who are publicly known where they reside, and who would not make these statements without a thorough conviction that they were true.

G. W. STONE'S VEGETABLE
LIQUID CATHARTIC
AND FAMILY PHYSIC:

THE most important discovery ever made in Medical Science, being a compound of herbs and roots which form the most powerful, safe, and agreeable physic ever offered to the public. The necessity of such a medicine has long been felt both by the heads of families and physicians. Its advantages over cathartics given in the form of Pills or Powders, must be obvious to every intelligent person. It operates more immediately and effectually upon the system, and at the same time is infinitely less difficult to administer, being perfectly agreeable to the taste. It not only produces the effects where physics is required, but completely restores the system, leaving the bowels perfectly free. It expels all humors from the blood, is a certain cure for piles, regulates the action of the liver, frees the stomach from biliousness, invigorates the whole system, and removes the cause of all local pains such as

Rheumatism, Neuralgia,
TIC DOULOUREUX, GOUT,
Pain in the Head, Side,
Stomach, &c. &c.

It may also be relied upon in all diseases of the bowels—DYSENTERY, DIARRHOEA AND CHOLERA MORBUS, yield at once to its magical influence. Again we repeat, TRY IT!—it holds no other recommendation. No family will be without it after they have properly tested its merits. Reader, if you have tried other remedies without success, despair not—relief is now at hand. Are you suffering from Sciatica, six bottles of my Liquid Cathartic will cure you. Would you be relieved from biliousness, three bottles will effect that you desire. If you are afflicted with Rheumatism, Neuralgia, or other local pains, two bottles will free you from them. All humors will be eradicated from the blood by the use of one to six bottles. In short, if you require a physic for any purpose, this is the most reliable, safe, and agreeable to the taste that has ever been placed within the reach of the public.

Miscellaneous.

Is there a Reliable Friend.

The name of Washington is dear to every American. Distinguished not only for bravery and intelligence but for the purest virtues which can adorn the human heart, he has been venerated in the memory of distant nations, and immortalized by the blessings he shed upon his country. He resembles the orb of day, imparting twilight long after he has set; and invisibly dispensing his light and cheering warmth to the world. Cautious and prudent, he was never surprised by the most disheartening failures; nor alarmed into compliance by the most unaccounted threats. His eye could penetrate the darkest design; and his powers of invention enabled him to escape the most formidable stratagems. As an illustration of his eagle eyed caution, I will briefly narrate his escape from a singular plot, which I learned from the lips of a venerable man several years deceased.

When the American army were stationed at West Point, during the Revolutionary War, the British head quarters were not many miles distant, on the Hudson; and each was waiting, like the figures on a chess board, for some favorable movement, to disconcert and thwart the operations of the other. Scouting parties would engage in frequent skirmishes; and wagons of provisions, ammunition and clothing, would fall into the power of those superior in number and address. On one of these occasions, a quantity of English uniform was seized by the American detachment; and several noble advantages obtained by the latter, inspired the enemy with the desire to retaliate. About this time, when at West Point, General Washington had an intimate acquaintance, not far resident from the army, in whose family he enjoyed the kindest hospitality, as well as relief from many of those sterner engagements which harassed his weary mind. As every circumstance was food to either army, a visit like this, not many miles from that camp, could not long escape the cognizance of the English; and to possess a prisoner like General Washington, would tend in their opinion, to shorten the period of the war. But the undertaking was difficult; there were always advanced guards to cover the American commander, and there was no mode of discovering his visits, except by winning over some one of the family. The friend whom the General visited, was once thought to have espoused the interests of the British; but he had taken a decided stand in favor of America, and though a brave man, he professed the strictest neutrality, alleging as his reason his years and his dependent family.

During the intimacy of the General, it was rumored in the American army, that his friend had been seen often returning from the British camp. Washington seemed to disregard the account; for he never ceased to visit the family, and apparently mingled as cordially with the host as if no suspicion had crossed his mind. At length one day, as the General was taking his leave, his friend earnestly requested him to dine with him the following afternoon, and emphatically named the hour of two as the moment of expecting him. He reminded him of the uncommon delight which his intimacy conferred—begged him to lay aside every formality, and regard his house as his home; and hinted that he feared the General did not consider it in that light; as the guard that always accompanied him seemed to indicate he was not visiting a friend.

"By no means sir!" exclaimed the worthy patriot, "there is no man I esteem more than yourself; and as a proof of the confidence which I repose in you, I will visit you alone to-morrow, and I pledge my sacred word of honor, that not a single soldier shall accompany me."

"Pardon me, General," cried the host; "but why so serious on so trifling a subject? I merely jested."

"I am aware of it," said the hero, smiling; "but what of that? I have long considered the planting of these outposts unnecessary, inasmuch as they may excite the suspicion of the enemy; and although it be a trifle, that trifle shall not sport with the friendship you indulge me."

"But then—the hour General?"

"Oh, yes, two o'clock you said?"

"Precisely," returned the other.

At one o'clock the following day, the General mounted his favorite horse, and proceeded alone, upon a bye-road which conducted him to the hospitable mansion. It was about half an hour before the time and the bustling host received him with open arms, in addition to the greeting of the family.

"How punctual, kind sir!" exclaimed the warm hearted friend.

"Punctuality," replied Washington, "is an angel virtue embracing honor as well as important concerns. He that is unpunctual with a friend may doubt his integrity."

The host started; but recovering himself, he added—"that yours is a proof we enjoy your fullest confidence."

Washington proposed to promenade on the piazza previous to the dinner. It overlooked a rough country several miles in extent: fields of grain here and there sweeping beneath the sides of black hills, producing nothing but rocks and grass, shallow runnels of water flowing along the narrowness of the uneven waste—then hidden by woodlands intercepting a prospect of the country beyond—spotted now and then with silver glimpses of the Hudson, stealing through the sloping grounds below, and chequered on both sides by the dim purple highlands frowning sometimes into hoary battlements, and tapering again into gentle valleys, hardly illuminated by the sun.

"This is fine bold scenery!" exclaimed the General apparently absorbed in the beauty of the prospect.

"Yes, sir," replied the friend, looking wishfully around, as if expecting some one's approach; but catching the piercing glance of Washington, his eyes were fastened confusedly on the floor.

"I must rally you my friend," observed the General; "do you perceive yonder plain, that boldly rises from the water and suddenly is lost behind that hill which obstinately checks the view?"

"I do," replied the absent listener, engaged apparently in something else than the subject of inquiry.

"There," continued the hero, "my enemies lie encamped; and were it not for a slight mist, could almost fancy that I perceive his cavalry moving; but hark, that cannon! Do you think it proceeds from the head quarters of the enemy?"

While pointing out to his friend the profile of the country, the face of the latter was often turned the opposite way, seemingly engrossed in another object directly behind the house. He was not mistaken; it was a troop seemingly of British horse, that were descending a distant hill, winding through a labyrinth of numerous projections and trees, until they were seen glancing through the valley below—and then again they were hidden by a landscape.

"Would it not be strange," observed the General, apparently unconscious of the movement behind him, that after all my toils, America should forfeit her liberty?"

"Heaven forbid!" said the friend, becoming less reserved, and entering more warmly into the feelings of the other.

"But," resumed the General, "I have heard of treachery in the heart of one's own camp; and, doubtless, you know that it is possible to be wounded even in the house of one's own friend."

"Sir," demanded the downcast host unable to meet the searching glances of his companion, "who can possibly intend so daring a crime?"

"You are a little German girl, are you not?" he asked.

"I only mean," replied the other, "that treachery was the most hideous of crimes; for, 'udas like, it will even sell its Lord for money!'"

"Very true, dear sir," responded the anxious host, as he gazed upon a troop of British horses, winding around the hill, and riding with post haste towards the hospitable mansion.

"Is it two o'clock yet?" demanded Washington; for I have an engagement this afternoon at the army, and I regret that my visit must be shorter than I intended."

"It lacks full a quarter yet!" said his friend, seeming doubtful of his watch, from the arrival of the horsemen.

"But bless me, sir! what cavalry are those that are so rapidly approaching the house?"

"Oh, they may possibly be a party of British light horse;" returned his companion coolly, "which means no harm; and if I mistake not, they have been sent for the purpose of protecting me." As he said this, the captain of the troop was seen dismounting from his horse; and his example was followed by the rest of the party.

"General?" returned his false friend, walking up to him very familiarly, and tapping him on the shoulder, "General you are my prisoner!"

"I believe not said Washington, looking calmly at the men who were approaching the steps; 'but friend,' exclaimed he, slapping him in return on the arm, 'I know that you are mine! Here officer, carry this treacherous hypocrite to the camp, and I will make an example to the enemies of America.'

"The British General had secretly offered an immense sum to this man, to make an appointment with the hero, at two o'clock, at which time he would send a troop of horse to secure him in their possession. Suspecting his intentions our General had directed his own troop to habit themselves as English cavalry, and arrive half an hour precisely before the time he was expected.

They pursued their way to the camp triumphing at the sagacity of their commander, who had so astonishingly defeated the machinations of the British General. But the humanity of Washington prevailed over his sense of justice. Overcome by the tears and prayers of the family, he pardoned his treacherous friend, on condition of his leaving the country forever; which he accordingly did; and his name was ever after sunk into oblivion.

Knocking Down the Basket.

A little girl seven or eight years old was going up one of the streets in N—, carrying a basket full of bits of wood and shavings on her head. The wind blew hard, and a great deal of sleet had fallen the day before, freezing as it fell, and making the pavement very slippery. As the little girl stepped slowly and carefully, to keep her basket well balanced, a large boy, dressed in warm, comfortable clothes, went behind her, and slyly pushed her basket, sent it tumbling to the ground, scattering the wood in every direction. The shavings went flying down the hill, and the basket rolled over and over after them. The boy who had done this mischief burst into a loud laugh. The little girl turned upon him a sorrowful and reproachful look, and said, "No, no," and then ran for her basket. She slipped and fell. Poor thing! her troubles were more than she could bear, and she began to cry aloud. The boy stood still and laughed. Just then a gentleman, who had seen the whole, came up, and laying his hand on the boy's shoulder, said,—

"See what you have done! Was it a smart thing for a great boy to upset a little girl's basket on a cold, windy, slippery day? What skill or cunning was there in the trick? Anybody could have done it that had a heart bad enough. What fun was there in it? I cannot see any. Did you feel happy when you did it? I know very well you did not; although you laughed, you didn't feel well in your heart."

The boy said nothing, but hung down his head and looked ashamed.

"You are sorry for what you have done," continued the gentleman; "I see that you are. Now, do all you can to make up for it. Pick up the wood and as many of the shavings as you can, and put them in the basket for the little girl. Her fingers are already stiffened with the cold."

The boy did so, and then, turning to the gentleman, said, "Shall I put the basket on her head, sir?"

"No," was the answer; "you are stout and strong, and had better carry it home for her. You ought to help her all you can after what you have done."

"Where do you live?" said the gentleman to the little girl.

"Pleasant Street, she answered in broken English.

Plymouth Street; that is not far from here. What is your name?"

"Lena Schneider."

"You are a little German girl, are you not?" he asked.

She nodded her head, smiling as she did so; for, thought she was a stranger, her heart was warm by his sympathy and kindness. Pleasant tones and kind acts make acquaintance, and friendship, and love, very quickly.

O, how much happiness they make both for those who give and those who receive them!

The gentleman walked beside the little Lena on her way to her home, while the boy followed with the basket. She turned into a narrow street of old wooden houses, and stopped at the cellar of one of them. "Thank ye; good by," she said, as she reached for her basket.

"Do you live here?" asked the gentleman. She again nodded her head and smiled.

"We'll go in and see your mother," said he. Lena went down the old stairs, and opening a door, led them into a low, dimly lighted cellar, where sat a woman making baskets. On a blanket by her feet lay a miserable, half-starved infant, whose face looked old and withered. Two other children were sitting on the floor, playing with some small pieces of basket stuff. The mother and Lena spoke together in German, and the mother rose to offer what seats she had to the visitors, while Lena put some of the wood she had been gathering on the dying fire.

The gentleman asked some questions about the family; but the mother could not understand a word of English. He learned from Lena that the husband and father had died on the passage from Germany; that their money was all gone; and they had no friends in this part of the country to help them. He gave them some money, and then took his leave with the boy.

When they had reached the street he asked the boy his name.

"William Leonard," he answered.

"Now, William," said the gentleman, as he wrote a few words on a scrap of paper, "I am sure you would be glad to do a little to help that poor woman and her children."

"Yes, sir," said William, his face brightening as he spoke.

"Then take this note to my house, No. 54 W— Street, get as large a basket of hard wood as you can carry, and give it to the poor Germans. Those icy bits of old boards that they have, won't do much towards warming them in their open fireplace; they will need something more before I can get them a load of coal from the city and a stove. Now, good morning; will you not come and see me in a few days?"

"I should like to," said William.

"And perhaps you may then be able to tell me that there is more pleasure in helping people and doing them good than playing unkind tricks upon them."

"I think there is now," was the answer. William got a very large load of hard wood at the house he was directed to; but it did not seem very heavy to him, his heart beat so light and happily. When he carried it to the cellar, he found the mother and children gathered around a rude table, on which there was a single dish of stewed vegetables which they were sharing together. William was surprised at such humble fare. It did not seem sufficient; and he asked Lena why they had no bread or meat, and if they did not like them.

"Yes; good, good," she answered; no money."

William told her that the gentleman had given her money; but she made him understand that it must be saved for their rent. He at once thought of a few cents which he had in his pocket, hurried to the nearest grocery and bought a loaf of bread. He laid it on the table before the poor family without saying a word, and departed. O, how much happier he was, then when he stood that very morning laughing at little Lena as she lay crying on the ice, her wood scattered, and her shavings and basket flying away before her! As he closed the cellar door he heard Lena's loud "Thank ye," and the laughter of the other children, mingled with the mother's German blessing.

He heard something else, too—a gentle voice in his own breast approving his conduct. It was the echo of a voice from heaven, which speaks forgiveness to every child that repents of wrong doing, forsakes it, and begins to do right, trusting in Christ for mercy.

The Air we Breathe.

Nothing is more interesting than those general laws by which God preserves the order of the world. If we had a complete knowledge of all the wonderful contrivances that surround us, we should be filled with admiration and awe; to contemplate those with which we are acquainted, is the highest of intellectual pleasures. One of these contrivances may be made intelligible even to those who have no acquaintances with Natural Philosophy. The air is made of two different gases, or airs, mixed together in a particular proportion. Of these, one (oxygen), which we call life-air, is necessary for the support of man and all other animals, which would die without it; neither could anything burn without the help of this life-air. Since, then, a vast quantity of it is consumed every hour, how is the supply kept up? How is it that the stock of life-air is still sufficient for us, and for our fire and candles?

Now, besides these two gases, there is also present in the atmosphere another gas, called carbonic acid, which is made up of carbon and life-air. The name will be unknown to many, but all are acquainted with the thing; it is that which gives spirit to ale, wine, &c.; and even to water, which is insipid after boiling, from the loss of its carbonic acid.

The carbonic acid is produced by the breathing of animals, and the putrefaction of animal and vegetable substances. Now this constant supply must be got rid of, or it would kill us; and it is got rid of thus: all vegetables,—grass, herbs, trees, &c.,—suck in this carbonic acid during the day; nourish themselves with the carbon, and give back the life-air that was combined with it. In the night they do the reverse; but still, taking a whole day, they lessen the quantity of carbonic acid gas, and furnish the atmosphere with that supply of life-air, which is necessary for the existence of the animal creation.

Colored vs. White Men.

White men in this country stand a precious small chance just now. The negro is the "lord of creation." In him centres all that is important or valuable. His name is sounded throughout all the length and breadth of the land. Nobody else is talked about or thought of. White men is of small account. Point to the fact that on him rests the responsibilities of government,—the care of the great interests of Commerce, Capital, Manufactures, Agriculture, of Learning, the Arts, Religion, Civilization, and a negro stares you in the face; Kansas is shouted in your ear, and every body sets off in a tampe after Kansas and the negro. Commerce, capital, manufactures, agriculture, learning, the arts, religion, civilization, are of no account, they are small concerns, something to be dispensed with—not the "necessaries" but the "luxuries of life." And so the negro is everything and everybody, and the white man nobody.

Time was when the notion prevailed that this country was designed, in some measure, at least, for white men; that they were the superior race, and the negro inferior. But that idea is exploded now. The negro is the superior blood, and white man next, especially if he was born somewhere else besides America. The time, was too, when the great avenues of trade and commerce, the marts of traffic, the seats of learning, and the exchange, where the points were centered and whence radiated the nation's interests and the evidence of her progress and glory. But that idea has exploded, also, Kansas is the centre of attraction now—her wild and barren plains, pathless forests and desolate margins are the theatre of all that is stirring or important. The ship, the loom, the anvil, the locomotive, and all that has hitherto been held as evidence of progress—they are nothing now, and Sharp's rifles are the true symbol of the Republic's career. The Bible was once thought to be in its proper place in the pulpit—the preacher's text book. Not so now. Cannon balls and blunderbusses have usurped its place. The hitherto sound doctrine of "Peace on earth and good will to men," has been abolished for the later revelation of "Go ye into Kansas and shoot a white man." The formerly good maxim, "Get ye wisdom," has given place for "Get ye a rifle."

The fact has been ascertained that this Government was not designed for white men, but for the negro; the Washington, Madison, Jefferson, and the men of their days, had the negro especially in view when they laid the foundations of this Republic; that Washington, when he penned his Farewell Address to his countrymen, meant to address the document to the negroes of the land, and not to the ten times their number of white men.

Now all these things are as plain as a pike staff—indisputable as a railroad bond. Men are beginning to find them out; and everybody will soon give up the old notion, that we should concern ourselves about Commerce, Improvements, Education and such matters, but should fall in with the more savory theory of Negroism. Washington doubtless meant, and probably said, "Put none but negroes on guard." Instead of confining the selection to Americans,—and we expect in due time to see the theory advanced and adopted, that Washington, Jefferson, Madison, "and all those old fellows," were more than half negroes themselves, and that therefore the Fugitive Slave provision, the recognition of slavery, and the clause against interfering with it by Congress, were put by them slyly into the Constitution.—Albany Evening Statesman.

The Steam Whistle.

Many persons who are constantly in the way of listening to the horrid howl of the steam whistle, are unacquainted with the mechanical means by which the effects are produced. The whistle is formed of two cups placed one above the other, and opening towards one another. The lower cup is nearly filled by a ball or gland, so as to leave a narrow annular opening one thirty-second of an inch in width around the edge of the cup. The upper cup is hollow, and its lower edge is about one or one and one-half inch from the lower cup. By admitting steam through a valve to the lower cup, it escapes through an annular opening and impinges against the edge of the inverted cup.

This produces the sound. The heaviest whistles for locomotives are six inches in diameter. The hollow upper cup is made of sheet brass or copper.

Intemperance.

If there was ever any need of some effectual means for restraining the vice of intemperance, such need certainly exists at the present time. We have ample evidence that notwithstanding the liquor law, there is by far more liquor drunk now in community, and more inhuman drunkenness to be seen, than at any other time.

In regard to the law, as a proper means of restraining any moral vice, we have but little if any confidence in it, as we have hitherto affirmed; and especially as to the present existing liquor law we can recognize no philosophy, no wisdom, no christian spirit in it, and being destitute of these essential attributes, it can never command the respect of the people, and therefore cannot be relied on as a means of accomplishing any permanent good results in temperance reform. We would not, however, pretend to say but that the law might have some efficacy if it were strictly enforced; but however faithfully the officers may discharge their duty in this respect, there can be but little moral good accomplished by it. It can, at best only serve indirectly to prevent in some degree the squandering of money and the destruction of other property through drunkenness; but the passion, or appetite for the intoxicating drink remains the same—only prevented from indulgence by a legislative obstacle arbitrarily thrown into the uppler's accustomed path.

Some persons have used the flimsy argument that "if we have laws to punish theft, why not have laws to punish liquor selling?" We answer that the two different acts have no similarity between them; neither have the two different laws the same object in view. The law for theft aims more expressly at the security of property, and the penalty which it inflicts involves but a very faint hope that the culprit will be morally benefited by it, but expects rather to deter others from committing similar deeds of robbery; whereas the liquor law primarily anticipates only moral reform from its operations. Now we would ask if the same means are essentially to be employed, both for the bare protection of property, and for the moral reformation of men and women?

The only effectual liquor laws, (allowing that liquors must be manufactured) must be such as will regard all instances of liquor selling as felonious crimes, punishable by confinement in the State prison, and not by mere nominal fine. Such a law, as faithfully and fearlessly executed as the current laws for burglary and murder, would prevent liquor selling, and even liquor drinking, as effectually as any evil can be by legislative laws alone. But it will not be admitted that mere rum selling is a crime of such magnitude as to deserve the same punishment as do highway robbery and murder; then all prohibitory laws may as well be repealed at once, for they now serve to aggravate the already perverted passions of the habitual drinker, and to render his obdurate appetite still more keen and uncontrollable after a temporary compulsory abstinence from swallowing the "liquid fire."

How, then, shall the vice of intemperance be abated? In our humble opinion, the cheapest and most certain means are to be found in moral influence—in the soul-deep and never tiring appeals of our most able, most eloquent, and most christian men and women. The evil of intemperance arises from a perversion of the natural appetites, and the only legitimate remedy for such perversion is in treating the victim as an intelligent and morally responsible being—in teaching him in the proper manner and spirit the legitimate and natural uses of his appetites and passions—in continually exhibiting to him the sad and fearful picture of the inevitable consequences of their abuse—in aiding him to comprehend the powers of a duly cultivated and well directed will over his baser passions and appetites—in presenting such influence as shall serve to encourage him on to a better condition of things, when he may become his own master and rejoice in the consciousness that he is safely and permanently a temperate man. To distrust the efficacy and prospective success of these appliances faithfully pursued, is to doubt the wisdom of divine Providence, and to be entirely faithless in the efficiency of what is esteemed as the "promises of the Gospel Word." When these means fail, what can be expected from mere legislative laws in establishing permanent moral principles? Nothing that is reliable. But if the moral be perseveringly appealed to, and the laudable object kept steadily in view, success must be certain; yet perfection can scarcely be expected in a probationary state of things. Christ himself did not attain to perfection in all of his undertakings. He did not make Christians of all the Jews; but his lessons and example will influence the world unto eternity. Men of the nineteenth century are not expected to accomplish more than did the "Saviour of the world," but they may possibly do as much. If moral and Christian reformers would imitate their own Benefactor, they will at once cease their vain attempts to legislate peace into temperance and morality, and diligently apply themselves to the arduous task before them with the same spirit of love and faith that actuated the great Jewish philosopher and philanthropist.—Lowell (Mass.) Medical Examiner.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, May 24th, 1856.

"EVEN TO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE"

"WORTH AND WEALTH." This is the title of a work just about to be published by Stringer & Townsend, 222 Broadway, New York, embracing a collection of maxims, morals, and miscellanies, for merchants and men of business. It is enough to show its value and attraction to say that it is the production of FREEMAN HUNT, Editor of the Merchants' Magazine. We have before us the sample table of contents. It embraces topics of every character which can incite the merchant to honesty and steadfastness in his pursuits and enterprises, and give that amplitude to his character which is best conducive to happiness as well as monetary success. Every young merchant, particularly, should have a copy of the book.

COWARDLY ASSAULT. One of the Representatives in Congress from South Carolina, a young and indiscreet politician, by the name of Brooks, committed a cowardly attack upon Charles Sumner, of the Senate, from this State, for some severe remarks made upon Judge Butler of the Senate, from his State, during his absence, and who it is said is an uncle of the assailant. Mr. Sumner was severely caned upon the head. The Boston Post truly says, that "the act was ill-advised and unfortunate, as it will please nobody so much as the Black Republicans."

JIM MYERS' equestrian establishment will raise its tent in Quincy, To-day, and give, as is usual, an exhibition both afternoon and evening. The advertisement of this company promise great things, and we have reason to believe the proprietors will certainly fulfill their promises. The ascension from the ground to the height of sixty feet, on a single wire by a lady, is represented by those who have seen it, to be the most daring feat ever accomplished; it is advertised to take place at 1 o'clock, precisely. The fairy pageant, Chimera, of which we hear the highest praises, is to be performed both afternoon and evening, in conjunction with all the other numerous and varied attractions of the company.

LOOK OUT FOR THE LOCOMOTIVE. Spalding & Rogers' Circus which combines in an eminent degree the attractions usually found in such Companies, will give their first exhibition this season, on Wednesday, June 2d. Let them have a welcome reception.

JOE PENLAND, the comical, the amusing and successful caterer to the amusements of the people, will also exhibit on the 4th.

Boston Correspondence.

Home Matters.—City vs. Rural Life.—Stampede of business men back to Boston.—Great Sale of House Lots at South Boston; its present prosperity.—Hon. J. J. Wright.—Legislature.—Washington news; the Cabinet at work.—Belaguered aspect of affairs with England.—Civil war in Kansas.

Business has been very active with many classes, the past few weeks in our city; money easy, and the prices of labor encouraging. Retail trade is active, and prices of the necessities of life declining.

There is so much competition with our coast-wise navigation, the freights are truly low compared with last year; but foreign commercial enterprise continues to prosper and the sails of our clipper ships everywhere where the ocean, transporting the products of our favored land in triumph, to every part of the globe. The commerce of Boston at the present moment, falls but little short of London and New York.

There seems to be a returning love for our city and its immediate suburbs; as large numbers who have hitherto lived on the different lines of Railroad, somewhat distant in the country, are selling out their rural residences by wholesale, and are moving back to the city or its environs. The past cold winter and the raised prices for passengers in the Railway cars, are inducing people living somewhat distant in our country towns, but doing business in Boston, to get as near the city as possible. The demand for houses in Boston and its outskirts, particularly Cambridge and Chelsea, is now very great.—South Boston, the most salubrious portion of this great metropolis, is fast growing up. A large sale of real estate occurred there a few days since under the direction of that Napoleon of auctioneers, Col. N. A. Thompson. Seventy-five lots, scattered in different parts of South Boston, and embracing about six acres of territory, were put up, and forty-one, actually sold, amounting to $26,745 cents, for $47,557.02, or about thirty-seven cents per foot on the average. These lots will soon be built upon. There is but little doubt that the South Boston House Extension, whose charter having run out, is about to be revived, will soon be built. One of the respected editors of the South Boston Mercury, the Hon. A. J. Wright, has his residence in this prosperous and pleasant place. He is "every inch" a man and a gentleman, and has been an able member of both branches of our Legislature. Both as an editor and legislator he has proved himself an able champion and true friend to the interests of South Boston. This, all readers of the Mercury will readily acknowledge. His series of editorial articles on the Shore Flats of the southerly inner portion of Boston Harbor, are well written, and have met with great public favor.

The "Great and General Court" is still here in green summer, much to the dissatisfaction of their worthy constituents. But they are very busy and conservative, and will be prolonged after a session of over five months, with a pay to each member of the House and Senate, of nearly five hundred dollars, having accomplished we hope some good and no harm. These long "rump parliament" sessions are becoming odious to the people, and they should be constitutionally limited to one hundred days as is the case in New York and some other states of the Union. If the Legislature of those states sit over one hundred days they receive no pay.

For the purpose even of a brief digest, I approach the Washington rumors of the present week with reluctance. The President and his Cabinet have their hands full, and great wisdom must be used to prevent a foreign war, and a civil war. The President is placed in a most trying position and is oppressed with care.

In the difficulties with England, our government has the best of the argument, having acted throughout, as the aggressor party. If Mr. Crampton is dismissed, the next step with Great Britain is war. Nothing but the sternest necessity would lead our government to give the British Minister his passports. But if it is done, mark me, the American people, will sustain the national administration. Mr. May, the Secretary of State, is one of the ablest statesmen of this or any other country. By him our foreign affairs have been managed with great diplomatic skill, and I am sure he never would consent to the dismissal of Mr. Crampton, without good reasons, satisfactory to the American people.

As for Kansas matters, I give you the telegraphic despatches from St. Louis, Mo. to 19th inst. which will convey to you the state of things there better than I could describe them by any extracts. They are as follows:

"Advice from Kansas to the 14th inst. state that about one thousand men have responded to the proclamation of the United States Marshal, and are encamped in the vicinity of Lawrence and Leavenworth, their avowed purpose being to compel the people of Lawrence to acknowledge the 'Territorial law'."

It is said there are about fifteen hundred men in Lawrence, thoroughly armed with Sharpe's rifles, and have two pieces of artillery in their possession. They have erected breastworks, and have given notice that they will resist all attempts at arrest.

Judge Fane is acting as Sheriff until Jones recovers, who is reported to be convalescent. Fane while in the discharge of his duty has been shot at twice.

The requisition of Gov. Shannon for the return of Robinson was forwarded on Wednesday last. Ex-Gov. Reeder has fled, but his arrest is considered certain. NEMO.

For the Patriot.

Town Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: I see in the Warrant issued for a Town Meeting, the 27th inst, an article assing of the town to dispose or lease a portion of the Old Cemetery, for the purpose of enlarging a building for adjoining.

Now sir, this seems to be a strange move on the part of individuals requesting the town to sell to them a part of the old burying ground, as it is a well known fact that this ground has already been sold to small for burial purposes, and this being the case, why should the smallest fraction of it be sold. Then, again, when the building that is proposed to be placed here, was removed, (this building originally stood in this vicinity) the great reason, was the want of the land for enlarging the Cemetery, and since the removal of this building, this section of the ground has been about all occupied by tombs. Then it is a doubt whether the Selectmen would allow it as they are the Board of Health, and it would be a gross violation of all sanitary rules and regulations to crowd this building upon the tombs and graves.

And if this should be allowed, where is it to stop? Before a great while the Railroad Corporation will want a part of this ground to facilitate their business. And as the town is rapidly increasing in population, the Town House will have to be enlarged to meet the requirements of its citizens; then another sacrifice will have to be made for building purposes.

I hope there will be a general turn out of the citizens, and give a signal rebuke to this innovation upon the quiet repose of the venerable relics of our fathers, mothers and friends. CIVIS.

For the Patriot.

Francis P. Blair, once more.

This eccentric specimen of latter day politicians, is out before the public in a series of communications and epistolary correspondence, in vindication of his injured reputation, which he says has received serious damage since his connection with the Black Republican party.

The "post laurent" of the Black Order in New York city is discarding most excellent music in his praise, and other journals, in the same category, are laboring with a zeal worthy of a better cause, in removing the dark spots which obscure the beautiful outlines of his character.

We little thought that poor Frank, while receiving his first lessons in Democracy, from the lips of that venerable sage, Andrew Jackson, would so soon forget its councils, as to betray his benefactor, and be left to his present pitiful course. That great and good man had unbought confidence in others, consequently, he was often the victim of artful and designing. Mr. Blair received many marks of favor from his hands; he charitably took him out of the streets of Washington,—fed and clothed him, and started him in a business which should have satisfied the ambition of any man. But the old saw,

"Put a beggar upon a horse, and he will ride" &c. was never better exemplified than in his case. With ease and a competency, arose ambitious desires. He aspired to be what nature never intended him for,—the leader of a great and honorable party.

It is true, he supported Mr. Polk as the nominee of the Democratic party in 1842, but with a lukewarmness that nearly cost that gentleman his election. Mr. Van Buren was his choice, and he was greatly mortified to think that he did not receive the nomination. His plea, therefore, that the Texas question was the cause of his estrangement from Mr. Polk, is without foundation. For if his terms of intimacy with General Jackson were as friendly as he pretends they were, as to be able to read his most secret wishes and thoughts, he must have known that this measure was a favorite one with the old hero, which had received his cordial support from its first rise to its final consummation; and that the nomination of Mr. Polk for the presidency, had special reference to this subject; to bring to a close what had been so happily commenced by Mr. Tyler. The regrets therefore, of which he speaks of from certain quarters, when it was known he was about to abandon his post as public printer, is all moonshine,—his dismissal was made out at the hermitage, and only waited the arrival of Mr. Polk in Washington, to have it put in execution.

Mr. Blair, however, did not give up that post of honor with a very good grace; like a whip school-boy, he was sulky and out of humor. But the principles and interests of the party were the ground he stood on, and afterwards proved. Secretly, he was the worst enemy it had; and in company with Benton and other discontents, were plotting its ruin. The Texas question was openly opposed by them; and they joined the Federalists for the express purpose of embarrassing the administration, in the hope of breaking it down. The Northwestern boundary question which also came up for adjustment during Mr. Polk's term, they seized upon with avidity, as furnishing them with another opportunity to carry on their war of opposition. The rallying cry of the Democracy was, "The whole or none;" they claimed every inch of that territory; but the Missouri senator decided otherwise, and took the British side of the question. He labored as hard to prove the right of the English to a portion of the soil, as did Mr. Polk and his Secretary of the clear and undisputed American title to the whole of it. So reckless in their hostility had they become, that they regarded neither the right of the citizen, or private character. They demanded the political emphysema of the Liberator of the State Department, for his presumption in furnishing facts contrary to the policy of Mr. Benton's statements. Senator to them was just such a thing in their burning thirst for revenge. Through their influence Great Britain is principally indebted for the possession she now holds in the Pacific. But the administration came out of the contest triumphant, and signally defeated the machinations of its enemies.

But they were not to be thus foiled. During the interval in which the Federal party held the Government, they had time for repose, and to concert other plans of operation. Accordingly on the elevation of Mr. Pierce to the Presidency, we find them at the head and in the front ranks of the Abolitionists of the North,—stimulating them on in their wildest schemes of fanaticism; resistance to the laws of the land—treason—murder, and for all they care, the dissolution of the Union. Their pretended sympathy for their newly adopted faith, should be suspected, when it is recollected, that this same Mr. Blair, has a large plantation in Maryland, which is literally covered with slaves. The fact is they care but little for Northern or Southern institutions. The Democratic party is the citadel at which their shafts of malice and malevolence is directed; they wish to humble it—to crush it if possible. "Rule or ruin," is the secret spring of their actions. That vain, ambitious, but disappointed man, Thomas Hart Benton, is one of the principal movers in this political farce. Fearful to trust his own popularity, he wishes to thrust upon the people, a member of his family, for an important office, which if successful, he fondly hopes will restore the Benton dynasty. But in 1856, as 1848, the Democracy will ride out the gale in safety; prove her devotion to the country and its institutions; and carry through the struggle unharmed, the sacred trusts committed to her charge.

Valuable REAL ESTATE, For Sale in Quincy.

THE residence of the late Hon. Thomas Greenleaf, consisting of about eighteen acres of good Land, with a large number of Fruit Trees of various kinds, for planting out trees.

The House is surrounded with numerous ornamental trees, mostly of forty years growth; a large and valuable flower garden, with grapes, shrubbery, &c.

The Land is mostly elevated, giving an extensive view of Boston harbor and the adjoining country.

A comfortable, ancient House, containing two parlors, two kitchens, wash room, wood shed, barn and out buildings; and is three-quarters of a mile from the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad Depot, churches, post office, stores, &c.

Likewise, Adjoining said estate, the present residence of Wm. G. Appleton, with two and a half acres of Land, and an excellent, country House, containing three parlors, two kitchens, six chambers and an attic, that can be made into two good chambers. Part of the house is unfinished, and can be finished into two good sized rooms, with various ornamental trees, making a pleasant site; a large number of Fruit Trees, mostly apples, peaches and plums, with a good supply of grapes. A large barn, wood shed and store house, three wells of excellent water, one of which has never dried, and one is under the back kitchen, connected with the house, back on a passage way, is a one-story building, nearly new, sixty feet by twenty-four, which can be had with the house if wanted. Apply to Dr. WOODWARD, near the Depot, or to Wm. G. APPLETON, on the premises. Quincy, May 24.

A BARGAIN! TO be sold at Public Auction on the premises, (if not previously disposed of at private sale,) on TUESDAY, June 2d, 1856, at five o'clock P. M., about two and a half acres of ridge Land, with the remains of a Dwelling House, situated on the 16th of March last, of Garret Maitland, now in California.

Said Estate is situated on Common Street, within a few rods of the flourishing Granite Village near the Ledges and one mile from the centre of Quincy.

The Land is of excellent quality, well fenced, and contains a good variety of Fruit Trees.

There is an unfailing Well of Water on the premises; and a Dwelling House could be built on the present foundation with little expense. Sale positive to the highest bidder. Conditions cash on the delivery of the Deed. For further particulars apply to Wm. B. DUGGAN. Quincy, May 24.

STONE QUARRIES In Quincy for Sale. SIXTEEN acres of valuable Granite Quarries, belonging to the estate of the late Hon. Thomas Greenleaf.

There are three Ledges open. One of them has been worked for many years by Mr. James Newcomb, and is largely in operation now. The stone is of the first quality and color, and easily got out.

Inquire of Dr. WOODWARD, near the Depot, or of Wm. G. APPLETON, near said premises. Quincy, May 24.

JOE PENLAND'S CIRCUS, -- CIRCUS, -- NEWLY equipped and greatly augmented will be found to present a combination of novel and attractive features, which will more than sustain the high reputation which it has attained by its representations in former years. Now as heretofore, the management will endeavor to deserve success by giving the public a fair equivalent for their money, and performing even more than they promise, thinking a well-deserved popularity honestly gained by fair proceedings much more desirable in the end than any more temporary advantage which may be obtained by resort to clapnet and humbug. In short, having received the approbation of a large portion of the community.

The Model Circus of America!! They are resolved to maintain it by giving performances which it shall be impossible to excel. Joe Penland is Clown!! And his name will be a sufficient guarantee that without coarseness, fun without vulgarity, and with wit and wit will characterize the comic department of the Exhibition.

FOR THE

Spring and Summer of 1856

No pains has been spared to procure the latest fashions in Pantaloons, Vests and Coat Stuffs, from the most celebrated Tailors of Great Britain's Dress Goods in Europe and America. It gives me pleasure to say that the styles for the coming season are more in accordance with good taste, than any goods which have been presented for several years.

Also—A good assortment of Youths' and Children's Garments,
a large variety of
HATS and CAPS

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Giving personal attention to the cutting department, garments will be warranted to give general satisfaction.

New Tailoring Goods.

J. A. HODEN,

WOULD inform the inhabitants of Quincy and vicinity, that he has

Just Replenished his Stock,

with a choice selection of Goods, suitable for

SPRING and SUMMER

He invites the attention of such as expect punctuality and good workmanship, for each only, such being his rule of business, and the reduced rates at which he sells, rendering any other mode of doing business impracticable.

His clothes will always be made with all his care and skill, of which he boasts very truly, having the garments made by his hands to ADVERTISE THE MATERIALS. Those sundries to combine elegance with economy, will do well and wisely to save him with a call.

Remember he is not to be understood by any other establishment, style, quality and finish correct.

Law Versus Saw.

Sitting in his office was a lawyer—
Standing in the street, a sawyer—
On the lawyer's anxious face,
You could read a knotty case
Needing law;
While the sawyer, calm and grim,
On a rough and knotty limb,
Ran a saw.

Now the saw-horse seemed to me
Like a double X in fee;
And the saw,
Whichever way 'twas thrust,
Must be followed by the dust,
Like the law.

And the log upon the track,
Like a client in the rack,
Played its part—
As the tempered teeth of steel
Made a wound that would not heal,
Through the heart.

And each severed stick that fell,
In its falling seem to tell,
All too plain,
Of the many severed ties
That in law-suits will arise,
Bringing pain.

Then methought the sturdy paw
That was using axe and saw
On the wood,
Held a yielding mine of wealth,
With his honest toil and health,
Doing good.

If the chips that strewed the ground,
By some stricken widow found,
In her need,
Should by light and warmth impart
Blessings to her aged heart,
Happy deed.

'Tis conclusion, then, I draw;
That no exercise of jaw—
Twisting Indian-rubber law,
Is as good—
As the exercise of paw,
On the handle of a saw,
Sawing wood.

Mischiefs Making.

O, could there in this world be found,
Some little spot of happy ground,
Where village pleasures might go round,
Without the village tattle;
How doubly blest that place would be,
Where all might dwell in liberty,
Free from the bitter misery
Of gossip's endless prattling.

If such a spot were really known,
Dane Peace might claim it as her own,
And in it she might fix her throne
Forever and forever;
There like a queen might reign and live,
While every one would soon forgive
The little slights they might receive,
And be offended never.

'Tis mischief makers that remove
Far from our hearts the warmth of love,
And lead us all to disapprove
What gives another pleasure;
They seem to take one's part—but when They've heard one's cares, unkindly then
They soon retail them all again,
Mix'd with the poisonous measure.

And then they've such a cunning way
Of telling their ill-natured tales; they say—
'Don't mention what I say; I pray—
I would not tell another.'
Straight to your neighbor's house they go,
Narrating everything they know,
And break the peace of high and low,
Wife, husband, friend and lover.

O, that the mischief-making crew
Were all reduced to one or two,
And they are painted red and blue!
That every one might know them!
Then would our village soon forget
To rage and quarrel, fume and fret,
And fall into angry pet
With things so much below them.

For 'tis a sad, degraded part
To make another bosom smart
And plant a dagger in the heart
Then let us endeavor
Then let us endeavor
In quietness with all around,
While friendship, joy and peace abound,
And angry feelings perish!

Anecdotes.

Aunt Rosy was dividing a mince pie among the boys, and when Jim, who had wickedly, pulled the cat's tail, asked for his share, the dame replied:
'No, Jim, you are a wicked boy, and the Bible says there is no piece for the wicked.'

'When I have a cold in my head,' said a gentleman in company, I am remarkably dull and stupid.
'You are to be pitted, then, sir,' replied another, for I do not remember ever to have seen you without a cold in your head.'

'Sir,' said a small sized man to one of huge dimensions, are you married or single?
'Don't I look like a single man?' was the other's reply showing his bulk.
'No—you look as if there was enough of you to make two single men.'

One day an urchin came running into a farmer's presence, half out of breath and without waiting for ceremonies, bawled out:—
Mr. one of your oxen's dead—and the other, too. I wouldn't tell you both at once, for fear you couldn't bear it!

A gentleman once said he should like to be a boat full of ladies adrift on the ocean, and see what courses they would steer. A lady in the room replied, 'That's easily told—they would steer to the Isle of Man, to be eaten.'

'Father,' said a cobbler's lad, as he was peggery away at an old shoe, 'they say that trout bite good now.'
'Well, well,' replied the old gentleman,
'you stick to your work, and they won't bite
you!'

Love After Marriage.

No wooing had preceded the marriage. It was merely a marriage de convenance—both parties understood and regarded it so. It was not they that were married, but the broad lands and fertile estates of their parents. Strange that any man, and much more, any woman, could stoop to so false an act! But Hugh Grandison might and would have loved his beautiful bride, had it not been for the stately coldness of her demeanor; he had been unsoiled by contact with the world, and longed for happiness and home. Alice Charlton cared little for either, and still less for him. In her first girlhood she had plighted her faith to one who left her for a time, and died in a far off land of gold, before on word or message could be sent to her he loved—died alone and among strangers, and was buried where her tears could never moisten the turf on his breast!

They told the tidings to Alice, little dreaming that the adventurer had been sought to her. She was in her own elegant home surrounded by a brilliant circle of guests, Hugh Grandison leaned over her chair, and bent his admiring eyes upon her queenly face and form. She heard the speaker through; the rich color died slowly out of her cheeks, leaving the white and stern; her lips shut firmly as if they would repress a shriek of agony; her large dark eyes wandered round the group with a gaze of passionate despair. The wondering looks of all around recalled her to herself, and making a graceful apology for her sudden abstraction, she played her part so successfully, that no one guessed the secret she guarded with Spartan like firmness.

Not until she was alone in her chamber, did the storm burst forth. She mourned as she had loved, most deeply and passionately, but to the world she seemed unmoved. A little colder—a little haughtier—a little more impatient of out spoken admiration and love, she seemed; but feeling was unfashionable in her exclusive circle, and none knew or cared to know, that the heart beating within her breast was a heart of stone.

A year passed away. The father of Alice, seeing that she was in no way inclined to choose one from his many lovers, chose for her, and selected Hugh Grandison as his future son-in-law. The young man was only too eager and willing to accept the offer, and offered him, but when her father brought him to her as an acknowledged lover, she checked all his raptures, and said coldly—

"Mr. Grandison, let us have a perfect understanding. I do not love you; I never shall love—a look of pain shot over her calm face as she repressed the word 'again.' She paused for a moment, and then went on with her cold dark eyes bent full upon his face:

"But my father wishes us to marry—your parents wish it—you wish it, and I am not opposed to the measure. But I beg you to understand distinctly that while I give a wife's duty, you must never look for her love or blind submission. From the moment we leave the altar, our lives must be separate, though our house is one. On these conditions and these only I will give you my hand. Are they accepted?"

The young man stood for a moment bewildered. There was no mistaking her words or manner. Those clear dark eyes, that scornful lip and haughty brow, assured him that she had spoken the truth, and no love was there; but he had long cherished a passion for her, and hoping that his fervent love might win some affection in return, when they were one in the eyes of the world, he clasped the small fair hand in his, raised it to his lips, and answered,

"I accept. And it shall be the study of my life to make you happy."

"Be it so," was her unmoved reply, and then she left him. The engagement was soon made public, and all eyes were curiously scanning the happy pair. They could find no fault with the ill concealed devotion of the lover; and the calm, unmoved way in which Alice received his attentions, or listened to his whispered words, was acknowledged to be the very perfection of high breeding. "A queen could not be more self-possessed," was the general verdict, as all looked eagerly forward to the bridal.

It came ere long, on a bright sunny spring day. The splendid parlors were filled with the fashionable friends of both parties, and a murmur of congratulation greeted the lovely bride as she turned from the altar with cheeks and lips as white as the snowy satin robes she wore. Her husband pressed his lips to her cheeks. She received that first caress as calmly as though he were but one of the glittering throng around her, and when all had wished her joy, she retired to her apartments, preserved an unbroken silence, while her dressing maid robed her in her plain travelling dress, and joined the party once again, attired for the journey. Calmly and coldly were all her farewells spoken; but when she came to her father, her forced composure gave way, and throwing her arms around his neck, she clung to him a moment in silent, tearless agony. It was her last display of weakness. She heard his parting blessing, and sitting by the side of her husband was whirled rapidly away from the home of her childhood.

A month elapsed before the pair returned to occupy their elegant mansion, far 'up town.' But in that month a strange change had taken place in Grandison. He seemed restless, uneasy and agitated; he followed the stately movements of his wife with anxious eyes; he was unhappy in her society, and wretched away from her side; in short, he was little the like merry lighted hearted bachelor his dearest friends had known, and one and all forebore matrimony on the spot, since it had altered him so.

It was not long ere Madame Rumor reported the startling fact that the princely household was carried on upon the European plan, that the gentleman and lady occupied separate apartments, and only met at stated hours in the great drawing-rooms below. Great was the wonder of the 'upper ten;' many the surmises hazarded upon, but no one dared question the parties most deeply interested, and they held their peace. In public and in private Alice was uniformly kind and polite to her husband; but this was all, and the wondering city had an opportunity of witnessing that anomaly—a man violently in love with his own wife, and seeking in vain to win her.

I doubt if Alice saw the struggle in his mind. Her own feeling were benumbed—her own heart seemed cold and dead. Judging his nature by her own, she deemed him satisfied with the rigid observance of all wifely propriety and dignity—it was all he required of her—she was true to the letter of her vow, and her spirit was at rest.

Two years had passed away. It was the anniversary of her wedding night, and Alice Grandison sat in her boudoir, robed for a party and only awaiting the arrival of her husband, who was to escort her. The years had changed her a little. She was fair and proud as ever. Her robe of azure velvet—her coronet of pearls and diamonds—her necklace, with its heavy diamond cross, her bracelets, and the single ring she wore, were fit adornments for an empress, and right well did she become them. She was alone, and touching a secret spring in her private escritoire, she took from a small drawer, two miniatures cased in gold, and placed them side by side. One was that of her dead lover; the other, that of her husband. Leaning her head upon her hand, she gazed long and earnestly at the two, and as her dark eyes dimmed with tears, she could not but acknowledge the shadowy likeness that existed between the loved and the unloved. It was a faint and shadowy one, but still it was no fancy. A something on the lip, cheek and brow—the same careless arrangement of the waving hair—and more than the same intensity of look and expression in the deep blue eyes. This, never seen before, was what now claimed her attention to both.

The small pendule over the mantel-piece struck the hour of nine, and with a deep sigh she replaced the portraits in the drawer, and left the room, to ask for her husband. There was a bustle and a sound of many feet in the hall before the summons was answered, and then the servant looked pale and frightened. A strange, sickening sensation crept over her as she asked, "Where is your master?"

The servant stammered, hesitated, and cast strange looks toward the door. Dreading she knew not what, she stepped out into the hall, and looked down the wide stairs. Four men were ascending, bearing a motionless form between them. The long hair was hanging down towards the floor, and from a wound in the forehead the dark red blood was flowing freely. They stopped short when they saw her awaiting them; they evidently dreaded a scene; but she was firm and calm, though heavy at her heart lay the thought, "If he is dead, how can I forgive myself for the unhappiness I have caused him!"

Obedient her calmly spoken orders, they laid him upon a sofa, in the splendid drawing-room. He had been struck down before his own dwelling, by a runaway horse, and the family physician, who was instantly summoned, gave little hopes of his recovery.

The wretched wife sat close behind him while the unsightly wound was closed; his blood flowed unheeded over her rich attire, and one small white hand was crimsoned as it held his head; for the first time her pale lips pressed his own; for the first time she laid her cheek to his, and called him by a thousand endearing names; for the first time the knowledge that she loved him came to bring her tenfold misery. The estrangement of years was forgotten; the stone was rolled away from the door of the heart, and its living waters gushed out once more. But he who would have perilled life and limb for one unsolicited caress from her, now lay pale and still while she pressed him to her heart; and the love that he had sought in vain during life, seemed given only too late—only to waste itself upon a pallid corpse, a guided coffin and a lonely grave!

She watched beside him day and night, in the chamber where he had spent so many lonely hours. Into this room she had scarcely entered since he had installed her mistress of his household; and everywhere she saw such traces of his love for her, as pierced his very heart. In a small alcove beyond his bed hung her portrait, the first and last thing he saw as he opened and closed his eyes. A small inlaid cabinet held the gifts she had bestowed upon him from time to time: a favorite book, a picture, a tress of dark brown hair, withered bouquets, a gold-encrusted star, and many things which she had given ceremoniously or lightly, which he had treasured as his choicest possessions.

The glitter of a golden chain upon his neck attracted her attention, as she bent above him one night. Softly she drew it forth, and gazed on a splendid picture of herself, set in a small gold frame. She gazed in silence for a moment, but when upon the other side she noticed a ring, the wedding ring that she had never worn, her composure gave way. Pride had left her heart, and love usurped its place. Sinking upon her knees by the bed-side, while her tears fell fast upon the dear hand that lay feebly upon the counterpane, she prayed as she had never prayed before, that God would spare his life that she might atone for her sin by years of patient and enduring love.

Her prayer was heard, for God is merciful even when we sin most deeply. All night she watched beside him. With the early dawn the physician (now domesticated in the house) entered the room. He held the shrunken hand in his for one moment, gave one searching glance into the marble-like face, and turning to her, said briefly, "Your care has saved him; he will live."

Late in the afternoon of that day, Alice sat beside the bed, waiting for the long deep slumber to be broken, that she might see those blue eyes look up at her once again. She was dressed as for a bridal, in a robe of pearly satin, with no ornaments save a single white rose in her dark hair, and another on her breast. The color deepened in her cheeks as the eventful hour drew near; her fine eyes glowed and sparkled with the love so long imprisoned and so suddenly set free.

The golden hands of her watch pointed to the hour of seven when the sleeper moved slightly, drew a long sigh, and opened his eyes. She bent over him with a beating heart; his gaze wandered uneasily round the room, fixed upon her, kindled, and he tried to smile. Very gently she passed her arm beneath the aching head, and drew it towards her, till it rested upon her breast; very gently the tears, which she could not quite repress, fell upon his wasted cheek.

He looked up in a strange, joyful surprise, asked, faintly, "Alice, what does this mean?" "It means that you must live to forgive me!" she sobbed—"that I love you with my whole heart, and none but you! Do not send me away, my husband!"

"Ah! his tears were falling now. Too weak to feel astonishment, he could only thank God silently. He drew her feebly to his breast, and whispered, "my wife! God bless you! Life is worth the living now!"

Their lips met in a long, long kiss of reconciliation and forgiveness. All was silent in the chamber; for happiness like theirs there is no language.

Make the best of Everything.

Most of the trouble in this world arises from the fact that people for the most part look upon the dark side of things. How much of sorrow might be done away with—how many quarrels avoided—how many bitter tears and aching hearts spared—if people would make the best of everything! Make the best of everything! It is an all-wise lesson to learn—one which if not learned will make many, very many bitter hours. Make the best of everything! It is an important lesson to learn, and the earlier in life it is learned the better it is. Make the best of everything! As the old adage says, "there is no use in crying over spilt milk." Misfortunes that have already happened cannot be prevented, and, therefore, the wise man, instead of wasting his time in regrets, will set himself to work to recover his losses. The mistakes and follies of the past may teach us to be more cautious for the future; but they must never be allowed to paralyze our energies or surrender us to weak repinings. A millionaire of this city tells the story that, at one period early in his career, he had got almost to the verge of bankruptcy; "but," says he, "I ploughed a deep keel and kept my own counsel;" and by these means he soon recovered. Had this man given way to despair, had he sat down to bewail his apparently impending ruin, he might now have been old and poor, instead of a capitalist, in a leading position. He adds that this characteristic was, that through life, in all circumstances, he did the best that he could, whatever that was, consuming no time in useless regrets over bad speculations.

The rule holds good, not only in mercantile affairs, but in the whole conduct of life. The man who is born to indifferent circumstances will never rise, if, abandoning himself to envy of those more blessed by fortune, he goes about sullenly complaining, instead of endeavoring to use to the best of his ability what few advantages he has. The patriot, deploring the decline of public and private morals, will never succeed in reforming the commonwealth, if he sticks for visionary or impracticable measures, rejecting those more moderate ones which are really attainable. The friend will soon have no intimacies at all, if, making no allowance for the infirmities of human nature, he judges too harshly the conduct of his acquaintances. Many a matrimonial separation might be avoided, if husband and wife, instead of taking offence at each other at slight provocation, would dwell rather on the good traits their partner displays. There are not a few statesmen, now living in retirement, who might still have gratified their ambition by serving the public, if they had understood, amid the intrigues and disappointments of public life, how to make the best of everything.

Nations, as well as individuals, should cherish this principle. The European revolution of 1848 would not have ended so disastrously for liberty if the people had understood how to make more of the advantages they secured at first. The ultimate triumph of the monarchs is to be attributed chiefly to their obeying the golden maxim, which their subjects had neglected, of making the best of everything. When the emperor of Austria was a fugitive; when Hungary, Bohemia and Italy were free, it would have required nothing but concert among the people to have established their rights on a lasting foundation. But they suffered jealousies of race to rise, allowed themselves to be attacked in detail, and even assisted the tyrants to subjugate each other. Instead of making the best of things, they had made the worst, and naturally we had almost said deservingly, lost all.

We never see a man bewailing his ill fortune without something of contempt for his weakness. No individual or nation ever rose to eminence in any department, which gave itself up to this childish behavior. Greatness can only be achieved by being superior to misfortunes, and by returning again and again to the assault with renewed energy. And this it is which is truly making the best of everything. It happened thus:

The Manufacture of Glue.

Common glue is of great antiquity, and is generally made from ears of oxen and calves, and the parings of the hides, skins, &c. The parings of ox and other thick hides make the strongest, and afford about forty-five per cent. of glue. The tendons and other like parts of animals make glue, but is not so strong as that made from hides. Animal skin in every form may be made into glue. The cuttings and parings of hides are first macerated in milk of lime in pits or vats, and the liquor is renewed two or three times in the course of two weeks. They are then taken out with the lime adhering to them, and washed in water in baskets, and are then placed on hurdles to dry. When exposed to the air whatever lime remains on them is converted into chalk by absorbing carbonic acid gas from the air. A small portion of chalk will not be injurious for the after processes, although quick lime would. The next process is the extraction of the gelatine or glue from the pieces of skins, &c., so treated. For this purpose they are placed in a large bag, or rather net, made of thick cord, and spread open within a large cauldron. A light framing within the cauldron prevents the bag from sticking to its sides. The water of the cauldron is then gradually brought up to the boiling point, and as the prepared skins in the net gradually melt and mingle with the water, more are placed in the net, and they are frequently stirred up and pressed with poles. The condition of the cauldron is tested occasionally by taking out some of the liquor and setting it aside to cool in a glass. When a clear mass of jelly is produced, the boiling is judged to be sufficient; the mouth of the net is then closed with its cord, and it is raised or hoisted above the cauldron over a roller, and left to drain. The liquor of the cauldron, if not strong enough to make glue, may be further concentrated by boiling. The contents of the net are boiled a second time, to make size, and when the solutions are too weak to make glue or size, they are economically used instead of fresh water. The gelatine liquid of the glue cauldron is drawn off into a vessel call a 'settling-back,' which is surrounded with warm water, and the temperature is kept up for about five hours to maintain it in the liquid state until the solid impurities settle to the bottom. The clear liquor is then drawn off into wooden coolers, which are about six feet wide and two feet deep; here it becomes a firm jelly, which is cut into square cakes with a spade; these are deposited in square cakes in a wooden box having slits in it, through which a brass wire attached to a bow is drawn to cut it into thin slices. These are placed on nets stretched in wooden frames and placed in long lattice sheds, when they are exposed to the air to dry. They are frequently turned and carefully watched until they are about two-thirds dry, when they are removed to a room, and they are left to dry still further, and then they are finally dried in a warm room. The drying of the glue is an operation which requires great care and attention.

Good glue should contain no specks, but be transparent and clear when held up to the light. The amber colored glue is the best kind for cabinet makers, not the black kind, as some suppose. The best glue swells without melting when immersed in cold water, and it renews its former size on drying. The best method of softening and dissolving glue for use is first to immerse it in small pieces, for about twelve hours, in cold water, then set it over a fire and gradually raise its temperature until it is all dissolved.

Fine white glue is made from careful selections of white clean skin parings; and these may be bleached in a degree by immersing them in a weak milk of chloride of lime instead of simple lime. Size for stiffening straw and leghorn hats is made of clippings of parchment and fine white sheep skin dissolved in boiling water. White glue is employed in the stiffening or dressing used for silks and other fabrics which are re-dyed and re-dressed.

If glue which has been steeped in cold water until it has swelled be then immersed in linseed oil and heated, it dissolves, and forms a glue of great tenacity, which, when dry, resists damp. Glue is employed for making moulds for casting in wax and plaster of Paris. Mixed with molasses it forms the ink rollers of the book printer.

"Words are Things."

Yes, and sometimes very dangerous things, too. They are like fire-arms and should be handled very carefully. Have a care of your words or you may hurt somebody when you do not mean to. A man's 'grub,' may depend upon his neighbor's grammar, and accusations of horrible sins may grow out of nothing but syntax. A worthy clergyman once came near losing his living in this way,—and a man's living is the next thing to his life. It happened thus:

The minister's name was mentioned in terms of eulogy one evening, at a social gathering in his parish, when a person present, a solemn-faced wagish fellow of convivial habits, observed that he quite agreed with the rest in their praise of Mr. A.

"We have often drank brandy and water together," said the bon-vivant, "and I consider him one of the pleasantest fellows ever I knew!"

A pretty compliment to a clergyman and a tee-totaler! The story got to the deacons and the deacons brought it up in the church. The parson was arranged and confronted his accuser, who declared that what he said was strictly true, but was obviously misunderstood.

"It is a solemn fact," said the witness, that your excellent minister and myself have drank brandy and cold water together: but then I drank the brandy and he drank the water."

And that was the whole story that had made so much disturbance in the parish, and had well nigh ruined the parson.

The Marriage Vow.

Perhaps there is scarcely an ordinary oath administered in any one of the transactions of life so little regarded—so little even remembered by all classes, and that taken in the most solemn manner, and in the presence of the Almighty, by the husband and wife—"Love, honor, and obey." "How many wives 'love, honor and obey' their lords?—How many even think of doing so? and yet there is an oath recorded against them, every simple violation of which is a distinct perjury. No woman should marry without first knowing her husband's character so well that she may obey him with discretion and safety. She yields at the altar to his disposition, from which even an attempt to fly is a crime. A wife who contradicts her husband is fore-sworn, no matter what manner of man he be, she must "obey," if she keep her oath. She has made no reserve or condition at the marriage ceremony. She has not said "I will honor and obey, if he shall deserve it." Her contract is unconditional. It would be better for young ladies, before they yield the fatal "yes," to take this view of the subject. They have a duty to perform to their husband, whether he be kind or unreasonable, and they must remember the poet's words,

"War is no strife
To the dark home and the detested wife."

No Gloom at Home.

Above all things, there should be no gloom in the home. The shadows of dark discontent and wasting fretfulness should never cross the threshold, throwing their large black shapes, like funeral pall, over the happy young spirits gathered there. If you will, your home shall be a heaven, and every inmate an angel there. If you will, you shall sit on a throne and be the presiding household deity. O! faithful wife, what privileges, what treasures greater or purer than these?

And let the husband strive to forget his cares as he winds around the narrow street and beholds the soft light illumining his little parlor, spreading its precious beams on the red pave before it. The night is cold and cheerless perhaps, and the December gusts battle with the worn skirts of his old overcoat, and snatches with a rude hand and wailing cry, at the rust y hat that has served him many a year. He has been harassed, perplexed, persecuted. He has borne with many a cruel tone, many a cold word, and nerved himself up to an energy so desperate that his frame and spirits are weakened and depressed; and now his limbs ache with weariness; his temples throb with the pain-beat caused by a too constant application; he scarcely knows how to meet his wife with a smile, or sit down cheerfully to their little meal, which she has provided with much care.

But the door is opened, the overcoat thrown hastily off. A sweet voice falls upon his ear and the kind tones are so soft and glad that hope, like a winged angel, flies right into his bosom and nestles against his heart.

The latch is lifted, and the smiling face of his wife gives an earnest welcome. The shining hair is smoothed over her fair brow; indeed, she stole a little coquettish glance at the mirror hanging in its narrow frame just to see if she looked neat and pretty before she came out. Her eyes beam with love, her dress is tasteful—and what?—Why! he forgets the trials of that long, long day, as he holds her to his arms and imprints a kiss upon her brow.

The Broom Business.

Perhaps there is not a branch of American manufactures that has within a few years increased so rapidly in extent, attended at the same time with a large advance in prices, as the manufacture of brooms. The acquisition of California, and the settlement there of a large population depending upon importation for a supply of necessary articles, and the increased population of cities and villages, have of course given an impetus to the trade of this city in brooms, as in almost everything else. But the demand for export to European and Australian markets, has been the leading cause of the large increase in this particular business.

The dealers in this city are principally supplied from Schenectady, in this State; although the towns of Hadley and Hatfield, in Massachusetts, furnish a considerable number yearly. It may afford some idea of the extent of the business to state, that one firm in this city, sell annually about forty thousand dozen brooms, manufactured in Schenectady, and ten thousand dozen from towns in Massachusetts. Most of the brooms manufactured in Massachusetts find a market in Boston. There are half a dozen houses dealing largely in brooms in this city. They are principally in Fulton street.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

FROM WASHINGTON. Peace has been again restored in the Councils of the Nation. Fanaticism has been met and most signally rebuked. Another document has been received from Mr. Marcy, covering the whole ground of our difficulties with England, showing the urgent necessity of the immediate removal of Mr. Crampson. The news from Kansas is also cheering, the government has taken peaceable possession of the Territory, and the people will now soon enjoy the blessings of good government.

SPAUDLING & ROGER'S CIRCUS, will make their grand entry into this place on Tuesday next. The reputation of this exhibition is a guarantee of its success. See advertisement.

PENLAND'S on the day following.

BEAUTIFUL CARPETINGS. Without exception the most beautiful specimen of carpetings we have ever seen, we noticed recently at the extensive carpet warehouse of John H. Pray, Sons & Co., Nos. 283 and 285 Washington Street, Boston. It will be recollected, that on a former occasion, we mentioned with pleasure the very creditable manner in which this firm do their business; and again advert to this characteristic, and advise all purchasers who wish to get their money's worth, to give them the first call.

FOURTH OF JULY. All that contemplate celebrating the glorious Fourth, will please notice the advertisement of Messrs. Sanderson & Lanergan, the well known Pyrotechnists to the city of Boston. They are prepared to furnish their superior Colored Fire Works in any design or in any quantity desired—they are the most extensive Pyrotechnists in the United States.

"Seaboard Slave States"

MR. EDITOR:—In a short notice of a work, entitled "Seaboard Slave States," I notice that the writer has fallen into an error, which could only have originated in wilful ignorance or unmitigated stupidity. He states that the author is an Englishman, and though the remarks that are made, are few, yet in every one of them the obsequious pimp of the miserable negro driver, is conspicuously manifest.

The author of the work is an American, and speaks sadly of the blighting effect of slavery. In honorable minds there is a strong sympathy for the unfortunate and degraded condition of the South; but the character and reputation of those who claim to be the exclusive friends of our southern brethren, in Massachusetts, is so infamous, that high minded men knowing this fact, cannot speak out the sentiments which they may entertain, lest their fair fame may be blackened and destroyed. And it is for that reason, that to day, in Massachusetts, there is not one man, who sympathizes openly with the South, except the ignorant and depraved.

Would the South discard this abandoned crew, they would find that the men of New England, the descendants of the Pilgrims, the sons of those who boldly breasted tyrannical power at Lexington and Bunker Hill—at Yorktown and Saratoga—at Eutaw and Brandywine, will contribute money and men to save their southern friends from the accumulated horrors of ignorance, recklessness and crime. They will supply them with the Bible, that good book whose holy inspiration will turn their hearts from dissoluteness and rebaldry, to the pure principles of our self-sacrificed Redeemer. They will supply them with missionaries who will teach them the Sacred Faith of the religion of Christ. Who will pour into their benighted hearts, that holy light which illumined the path-way of our fathers, over a tempestuous ocean to that sterile shore, where they could worship God in simplicity, in security and in truth. The descendants of the pilgrims have deep compassion for those whose lot has been cast in less prosperous and less happy places than theirs. They do not hate or despise them for their unfortunate condition. The feeling that they entertain for them is that of pity—deep heart felt pity—and the daily prayer from the pure and uncorrupted heart is, that our brethren of the South, may be relieved from the grievous and heavy weight of sin and crime, which now weighs them down and causes them to be so object and degraded. There is indeed a melancholy fate: day by day they sink deeper into the abyss of wretchedness: day by day they become viler and more abject, and unless the Christian world shall make strenuous effort to save them from the thralldom of iniquity, we shall behold the sad spectacle of a people, with climate and soil calculated to give them an elevated place in the scale of creation, become nothing but a foul blot upon the face of animated creation.

It is our duty, Mr. Editor, to labor in their behalf—it is our duty as Christians, as New Englanders, as people of the same broad land, to save them from their sad and impending fate. Let us all contribute something from our abundance, to supply them with moral and religious teachers.

DEMOCRAT.

For the Patriot.
Boston Correspondence.
Boston, May 28, 1856.

Senator Sumner—The anti-Slavery party—The Union in danger—Disgraceful outrages at Washington—Allusions to the Speech of Mr. Sumner.

Hon. Charles Sumner we believe is a native of Boston. His ancestors were found among the early settlers of the town of Milton; where the name is still favorably known among the most respected and industrious citizens of that fine old agricultural town. Mr. Sumner was graduated at Harvard University in a class of forty-eight members, in 1830, and subsequently embraced the legal profession; having received the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1831. He ranks high with the literati of our country, and is an amiable and upright man. In 1851 he was elected a United States Senator, by the Massachusetts Legislature, after a struggle for duration and strife unprecedented in the history of legislative elections.

Mr. Sumner early defined his position as being in the popular sense an anti-Slavery man. There is no mistaking this fact. He entered the arena of politics as the foe of slavery and he has been consistent. If I am not mistaken, there are two classes of anti-Slavery persons in our country. The one in favor of disunion—the immediate abolition of the Southern slaves, at the sacrifice if need be, of every slaveholder's life. They prefer to trample our glorious banner of stars and stripes in the dust—to dissolve the Union, by which desolation and woe would darken our land forever, than to continue that Union as our forefathers established it, for domestic slavery (always an evil) to work its own cure and final annihilation in the states and localities where the framers of the Federal Constitution found and where they left it. Furthermore, this was one of the conditions of the confederation, that slavery should be left untouched. The very language of the United States Constitution is, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively or to the people." God forgive the disunionists of our country, and touch their hearts with one heavenly spark of charity and patriotism; for it is only by a providential interposition, that those anarchists can be turned from the fatal error of their doctrines. The other class called the Free-soil or Republican party, are more conservative. They claim to be Unionists and States Rights Men, and simply oppose the extension of slavery. Of this class may be ranked Mr. Sumner. He is the sentiments of no small portion of the American people and do no discredit to the heart of any man.

In wrestling with the South on this momentous question of slavery, the fault lies in the hostile, unkind, criminating spirit of the North towards the South. We denounce them as destitute of every principle of humanity; we look upon the slaveholders with horror;—we upbraid them as guilty of the unpardonable sin of holding slaves; and we stir up the worst passions of their souls against us. Is this good logic, is this good policy. Shall we treat an erring brother (for the Southern men are our brethren) with unkindness—with scorn to make him better. The precepts of our Divine Master teach us better. I do not deny the rights of Mr. Sumner to speak as he did in the United States on Tuesday the 20th inst. The freedom of speech and debate in all public bodies is essential to the rights of the people and never should be molested. Many sentiments of Mr. Sumner's speech, more especially his allusions to Massachusetts, are honorable to his head and heart. In my humble view, his personalities, even if retaliatory, were the exceptional portions, and weakened the moral effect his great speech would have had upon the American mind. Severe as his remarks may have been on slavery and on the Kansas question, I despise the dastardly outrage upon this gentleman, in the Senate Chamber, on Thursday last, and hope the cowardly perpetrator will be expelled from the House of Representatives. I believe the "Second sober thought" of the Southern people, who are not wanting in magnanimity, will out and condemn the act as beneath the poorest apology for a gentleman. In the fervor of indignant feelings; on the eve of another presidential election when the forces of political parties are marshalling against each other, with that bitterness and unkindness peculiar to the American people, but which passes away after an election, like the evening cloud and morning dew; let us have more charity than to believe that the desperate attack by Brooks on the Massachusetts senator, should be construed for a moment as an insult of the South to the North. It would be too great a stretch for political capital by any party. The sins of one individual should not be manted on the whole community of the South. Alas! the holy band of fraternity, that has held the North and South so long together by the silken cords of love, is growing fairer. The inspired motto on our country's escutcheon, engraved by the blood of our patriotic fathers, "E Pluribus Unum," is now but a mockery. Our country with all its prosperity, grandeur, power and glory, is ill at ease

A spirit of strife is abroad, and the great American family, who should dwell together like brethren in unity, no longer sleeps the sleep of peace. If disunion must come out of this anti-Slavery or pro-Slavery quarrel, I care not what it is called, where rests the fearful responsibility? The contest has begun, but we know not its end. We shut our eyes from the thought of those scenes of rapine and blood that would follow a dissolution of this Union.

Town Meeting.

MR. EDITOR:—The Town Meeting so pathetically alluded to in last week's Patriot, resulted in leasing to the proprietors of the Copeland estate, a small portion of the Town Land, for the purpose of enabling them to place a building on that lot so as to stand square to the street.

There is a meeting called to reconsider the vote to lease this small piece of land, and as the land granted is so insignificant, and the Square and Burying Ground will look so much better to have a building so exposed as that will be, put on the square with the road—it is thought that all good citizens should vote again at the re-consideration. The main building which it is proposed to put on this lot will be three stories high and an ornament to the square. Crooked and angular buildings are some what fashionable in Quincy; but they do not strike the eye of the beholder as a durable style of architecture to copy extensively, and we regret to see opposition on trivial grounds. For instance, one man says I don't want a handsome building because it will make the estate opposite look worse than it does now; another, that there are stores enough in town already, to rent well; that the "Down-Towners" are growing weary of things their own way, and that crooked buildings are good enough for them, &c. &c. We believe the good taste and public spirit of the town of Quincy will sustain the vote, and that none will be influenced by misrepresentations of interested parties, but view the premises and vote as good taste and a regard to the public interest shall dictate.

Special Notices.

CITIZENS. The citizens of Quincy, without regard to past political differences, or divisions, who are opposed to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, to the policy of the present Administration, to the extension of Slavery into the territories, in favor of the admission of Kansas as a Free State, and of restoring the action of the Federal Government to the principles of Washington and Jefferson, are requested to meet at the Lyceum Hall, on SATURDAY EVENING, May 31st, at 7 1/2 o'clock, to elect delegates to State Convention, to be held at Worcester, the 4th of June next and to a District Convention to be held at Dedham, on the sixth day of the same month, and for such other purposes as the people may think proper when assembled.

NEWLY equipped and greatly augmented for the year 1856, it is confidently believed will be found to present a combination of novel and attractive features, which will more than amply repay the high reputation which it has attained by its previous success in former years. Now we have more than management will endeavor to deserve success in giving the public a full equivalent for their money, and performing even more than they expect, thinking a well-deserved opportunity herewith, gained by low proceedings, much more desirable in the end than any more temporary advantage

Poetry.

The Household Darling.

Little Ella, fairest, dearest,
Unto me and unto mine—
Earthly cheer, coming nearest
To my dreams of shades divine?
Her brief absence frets and pains me,
Her bright presence solace brings,
Her spontaneous love retains me,
From a hundred selfish things.

Little Ella moveth lightly,
Like a gracefully swan at play,
Like a brooklet running brightly
In the genial smile of May;
Like a breeze upon the meadow,
All bespoken with early flowers;
Like a bird 'mid sylvan shadows,
In the golden summer hours.

You should see her, when with nature
She goes forth to think or play,
Every limb and every feature
Drinking in the joy of day;
Stepping oft 'mid floral splendor,
Snatching flowers and perfumes,
She doth seem so fair and tender,
Kin to the ambrosial blooms.

Sweet thought stirs like a garland
On her placid brow and eyes—
Eyes which seem to see a far land
Through the intervening skies;
To some voice above the spheres,
Whist her earnest feelings soften
Into calmness; 'kin to tears

Now all mirthful is her manner,
Though to laugh so little as hers;
Grave demeanor comes upon her
When her inmost nature stirs.
When a gleam of light repulses her,
All her gladness goes to flow;
But the word "forgiveness" moves her
With new joy, and sets her free

Should a shade of sickness near me,
Then she takes a holier grace;
Comes to strengthen and to cheer me,
With her angel light of face.
Up the stairs I hear her coming,
Duly at the morning hour,
Sweetly singing, softly humming,
Like a bee about a flower.

Good books wake ecstatic feelings
In her undeveloped mind;
Holy thoughts, whose hallow revelations,
Teach her love to human kind.
Music thrills her with a fervor,
Like the songs of seraphim;
May bright spirits teach and nerve her
To partake the perfect hymn.

God of Heaven! in thy good seeing,
Spare this darling child of mine,
Spare me this unsullied being,
Till she brings me close to thee.
Unseen angels, bless her, mould her,
Into goodness, clothed in grace,
That on high I may behold her
Talking with ye, face to face.

The Printers.

Hurrah, for nature's nobleman,
The artists of the mind!
Hail! wielders of the mighty pen,
With every glory twined.
Where thought comes freely to its God,
Unshackled, as he gave it,
The freemen rule o'er Freedom's sod,
As freemen long will have it.

Roll back the veil of many years,
The iron age just broken,
The spirit of a Faust appears,
To find out Freedom's token.
A German still unknown to fame,
Made Europe's wise men wonder,
As he who holds a dearer name,
Drew down the living thunder.

'Tis yours, the mightiest to solve,
The record of all ages,
And still like brilliant suns revolve
Around the future's pages.
You whispered to Genoa's son
A deed that seemed gigantic,
And he a world of glory won,
Across the broad Atlantic.

'Tis yours to wake the Russian slave,
To rouse the noble German;
To tell Liberia she is brave,
Downtrodden by England's fiend.
To breathe the records of the past
To men of heart and daring,
When Rome's throne and the blast
A banner wave the bearing.

Pale Europe still must pale grow,
Her heartstrings now are breaking;
And her blood drops freely flow,
Oppression's soul forsaking.
They flow to water our fair tree,
And from it we to sever—
A health to Franklin, Liberty,
And Freedom's press forever.

Anecdotes.

A friend courted a lady for twenty-eight years, and then married her. She turned out to be a perfect virago, but died in two years after the wedding.

'Now,' said our friend, in a self-congratulating tone, 'see what I have escaped by a long courtship!'

'My dear Polly, I am surprised at your taste in wearing another woman's hair on your head,' said Mr. Smith to his wife.

'My dear Joe, I am equally astonished that you persist in wearing another sheep's wool on your back.'

A lady riding in a carriage found herself seated by the side of an old matron who was exceedingly deaf. 'Ma'am,' said she, in a high tone, 'did you ever try electricity?'

'What did you say, miss?'

'I asked you if you ever tried electricity for your deafness?'

'Oh, yes, indeed I did; it's only last summer I got struck by lightning, but I don't see as it done me a bit of good.'

Mc. Eckron's CELEBRATED LINIMENT.
Equally Good for MAN or BEAST!
HAS triumphed where all other external applications have failed to have any beneficial effect. It is justly acknowledged to be the greatest EXTERNAL REMEDY in the world, and its sale is unsurpassed in the annals of medicine. Unlike most other popular medicines of the day, it is used and recommended by many eminent members of the Medical Faculty; their prejudices having yielded to the many indisputable demonstrations of cures it has performed where all other remedies have failed. Hundreds of certificates might be given showing almost unnumbered cures in cases of Rheumatism—Neuralgia—Spinal Complaints, &c., and in Bruises, Burns, Flesh Wounds of all kinds, old Sores, Sprains, Broken Bones, dislocations, &c., &c.,—but a FAIR TRIAL is all that is required to convince the most skeptical of its merits. AYER'S PILLS
Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.
INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.
JULIUS RUELL, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose choice products are found at almost every toilet, says:
"I am happy to say of your CATARRHIC PILLS, that I have found them a better family medicine, for common use, than any other within my knowledge. Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and coincide with me in believing that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out disease and curing the sick, as not only effective, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which make them valued by the public, when they are known."
The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Baltimore, 15th April, 1854:
"Dr. J. C. AYER—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which has of late years overtaken me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds, and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."
JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co., says:
"Pa. R. R. Office, Philadelphia, Dec. 13, 1853.
"Sir: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Catarrhic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will procure them."
The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of West-
"Dr. J. C. AYER—Sir: I have been afflicted from my birth with scrofula in its worst form, and now, after twenty years' trial, and an untold amount of suffering, have been completely cured in a few weeks by your Pills. With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be imagined when you realize what I have suffered, and how long."
Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and made me almost blind; at others it rendered my skin, at other times it settled in the scalp of my head, and destroyed my hair, and has kept me partly bald all my days; sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months a raw sore. About nine weeks ago I commenced taking your Catarrhic Pills, and now am entirely free from the complaint. My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair has become a healthy growth; all of which makes me feel already a new person."
"Hoping this statement may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours, &c.,
"I have known the above named Sufferer from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true."
ANDREW J. MESERVE,
Owner of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co.,
Capt. JOEL PRATT, of the ship Marion, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:
"Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious, and I feel relieved of my Physician, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have given them to my children, for worms, with the best effects. They were promptly cured. I recommended them to a friend who had been afflicted with the same complaint for months; he told me in a few days they had cured him. You make the best medicine in the world; and I am free to say so."
Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known in this and the neighboring States.

"Sir: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and family have been very much benefited by your medicines. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous cough, by your Cherry Pectoral, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have several times been cured from attacks of the Indigestion and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. Your CATARRHIC PILLS have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and constiveness, which has grown upon me for some years—indeed, this cure is much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best Physicians which this section of the country afford, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken."
"You seem to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you may well suppose we are not ungrateful of it."
Yours respectfully,
"Senate Chamber, Ohio, April 30, 1854.
"Dr. J. C. AYER—Honored Sir: I have made a thorough trial of the CATARRHIC PILLS, left me by your agents, and have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism under which he found me suffering. The first dose relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel in better health now than for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your CATARRHIC PILLS. Yours with great respect, LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons who are publicly known where they reside, and who would not make these statements without a thorough conviction that they were true.

The knock was immediately responded to by the opening of the door from within. An aged woman, neatly dressed, and who had evidently risen from her wheel, was the sole inmate of the little cot. 'Bless your heart, girl,' said the dame, as she entered with her visitor, and sat down to the wheel again; there must surely be something particular about 'to day, for you did not use to knock.'

'I was afraid some one might be with you, mother,' said the girl, who had taken a seat opposite to the spinner.

'And though a neighbor had been here,' replied the dame, 'this surely wouldn't have frightened you away. But the truth is, you have got something to say to me, Catherine,' continued the speaker kindly; 'out with it, my dear, and depend upon the best counsel that old Hannah can give.' The young woman blushed, and did not speak. 'Has William Hutton asked you to become his wife, Catherine?' said the dame, who easily and rightly anticipated the matter that was in the thoughts of her youthful visitor.

'He has, mother,' was the reply. 'The woman began to berr earnestly at her wheel. 'Well, my dear,' said she, after a short pause, 'is not this what you have long expected—aye, and wished? He has your heart; and so I suppose it needs no wish to tell you what will be the end on't.'

This might be very true, but there was something about Catherine's mind which struggled to be out, and out it came. 'Dear Hannah,' said she, seating herself close by the dame, and taking hold of her hand, 'you have been a kind friend—a parent—to me, since my own poor mother died, and I have no one else to look to for advice but yourself. I have not given William an answer, and would not till I had spoken to you; especially as something—as you once said—

'What did I say, Catherine?' interrupted the old woman; 'nothing against the man you love, surely. He is, from all I have seen and heard, kind-hearted, industrious and in every way well-behaved.'

'Yes, Hannah,' replied the woman; 'but you once said, after I had brought him once or twice to see you, that you did not like those—those sort of low fits that sometimes fall upon him even in your company. I have often noticed them since, Hannah,' continued Catherine with a sigh.

'Plague on my thoughtless tongue for saying such things to vex you, my dear child! He was a soldier you know, a good many years ago, before he was twenty, and fought for his country. He may have seen sights then that make him grave to think upon, without blaming himself. But whatever it may be, I meant not, Catherine, that you should take such a passing word at heart. If he has some little cares you will easily soothe them and make him happy.'

As the worthy dame spoke, her visitor's brow gradually cleared, and after some further conversation, Catherine left the cottage lightened at heart with the thought that 'her old friend approved of her following the course to which her inclination led her.'

Catherine Smith was indeed well entitled to pay respect to the counsels of Hannah. The latter had never married, and had spent the greater part of her life in the service of a wealthy family at Morpeth. When she was there, the widowed mother of Catherine had died in Newcastle; and on learning of the circumstance, Hannah, though a friend merely, and no relation, had sent for the orphan girl, then about ten years of age, and had taken care of her till she grew fit to maintain herself by service. On finding herself unable to continue a working life longer, Hannah had retired to Newcastle, her native place, where she lived in humble comfort on her long career of servitude. Catherine came back with her to Newcastle, and immediately entered into service there. Hannah and Catherine had been two years in these respective situations, when the dialogue which has been recorded took place.

On the succeeding expiry of her term of service, Catherine was married to the young man whose name has been stated as being William Hutton. He was a joiner by trade, and bore, as Hannah had said, an excellent character. The first visit paid by the newly-married pair was to the cottage of the old woman, who gazed on them with a truly maternal pride, thinking she had never seen so handsome a couple. The few years spent by Hutton in the army had given to his naturally good figure an erect manliness, which looked as well in one of his sex, as the light, graceful figure, and fair ingenuous countenance of Catherine, was calculated to adorn one woman kind. Something of this kind, at least, was in the thoughts of Hannah, when Catherine and her husband visited the dame's dwelling.

Many a future visit was paid by the same parties to Hannah, and on each successive occasion the old woman looked narrowly, though as unobtrusively as possible, into the state of the wife's feelings, with a motherly anxiety to know if she was happy. For, though Hannah, seeing Catherine's affections deeply engaged—had made light of her own early remarks upon the strange and most unpleasant gloom occasionally, if not frequently, observing the look and manners of William Hutton, the old woman was never able to rid her own mind altogether of the misgivings upon the subject. For many months after Catherine's marriage, however, Hannah could discover nothing but unalloyed happiness in the air and conversation of the youthful wife. But at length Hannah's anxious eye did perceive something like a change.

Catherine seemed sometimes to fall when visiting the cottage, into fits of abstraction not unlike those which had been discovered in her husband. The aged dame felt greatly distressed at thought of her dear Catherine being unhappy, but for a long time held her peace upon the subject, trusting that the cloud might be a temporary one, and would disappear.

It was not so, unfortunately. Though, in their manner to each other when together, nothing but the most cordial affection was observable. Catherine, when she came alone to see Hannah, seemed to prey upon some uneasiness, which all her efforts could not conceal from her old friend. Even when she became for the first time a mother, and, with all the beautiful pride of a young mother's love, presented her baby to Hannah, the latter could see signs of a secret grief imprinted on Catherine's brow. Hoping by her counsels to bring relief, Hannah at last took an opportunity to tell the young wife what she had observed, and besought her confidence.

At first Catherine stammered forth a hurried assurance that she was perfectly happy, and in a few seconds, belied her word by bursting into tears, owning that she was very unhappy. 'But I cannot, Hannah, she exclaimed, 'I cannot tell the cause—not even to you?'

'Don't say so, my poor Catherine,' replied Hannah; 'it no curiosity that bids me to interfere.'

'Oh no, Hannah!' replied the young wife, 'I know you speak from love to me.'

'Well then,' continued the dame, 'open your heart to me. Age is a good adviser. Catherine was silent. 'Is your husband harsh?' asked Hannah.

'No, no,' cried the wife; 'man could not be kinder to woman than he is to me.' 'Perhaps he indulges in drink; in private.'

'Hannah, you are mistaken altogether,' was Catherine's reply; 'my husband is as free from such faults as ever man was.' 'My dear child,' said the old woman, almost smiling as the idea entered her head, 'you are not suspicious—not jealous?'

'I have never had a moment's cause, Hannah, replied Catherine. 'No, my griefs are not of that nature. He is one of the best and dearest of husbands.'

Old Hannah was puzzled at these replies, as much as she was distressed by Catherine's open avowal of having some cause of sorrow; but seeing that her young friend could not make up her mind to a disclosure at that time, the aged dame gave up her inquiries, and told Catherine to think seriously of the propriety of confiding all to her.

Hannah conceived that on mature consideration, Catherine would come to the conclusion of seeking council at the cottage. And she was not wrong. In a few days after their late conversation, the young wife came to visit Hannah again, and after a little embarrassment entered on the subject which was uppermost in the minds of both.

'Hannah,' said Catherine, 'I fear you can serve me nothing—I fear no living being can serve me. O Hannah! good as my husband appears to be—good as he is—there is some dreadful weight pressing on his mind, which destroys his peace, and mind too. Alas! the gloomy fits which you as well as I noticed in him, are not, I fear, without cause.' Catherine wept in silence for a minute, and then continued: 'All that I know of cause arises from his expressions, his dreadful expressions—while he is sleeping by my side, Hannah! he speaks in broken language of murder—of having committed murder! Hannah! perhaps a woman deceived and killed by him.'

As Catherine said this, she shuddered, and buried her face in that of the babe which she carried in her arms.

Hannah was shocked to hear of this, but her good sense led her at once to suggest, for the comfort of the poor wife, that it was perfectly possible for her husband to imagine himself a murderer in his sleep, and speak of it without the slightest reality in the whole affair.

'Ah, Hannah,' said Catherine sadly, 'these dreadful sayings are not the result of one nightmare slumber. They occur often, too often. Besides, when I first heard him utter in his sleep these horrible things, I mentioned the matter to him in the morning at our breakfast and laughed at it; but he grew much agitated; and telling me to pay no attention to such things, as he sometimes talked nonsense, he knew, in his sleep, he arose and went away, leaving his meal unfinished, indeed scarcely touched. I am sure he does not know how often he speaks in his sleep, for I never mentioned the subject again—although my rest is destroyed by it. And then his fits of sadness at ordinary moments! Hannah, there is some mystery—some terrible mystery under it! Yet,' continued the young wife, 'he is so good, so kind, so dutiful to God and to man! He has too much tenderness and too much feeling to harm a fly! Hannah, what am I to think or do, for I am a wretch at present.'

It was long ere the old dame replied to this question. She mused greatly on what had been told her, and in the end said to Catherine: 'My poor child, I cannot believe that William is guilty of what these circumstances lay seemingly at his door. But if the worst be true, it is better for you to know it than to be in this killing suspense forever. Go, gain his confidence, Catherine; tell him all that has come to your ear, and say that you do so by my advice. Hannah continued to use persuasions of the kind some time longer, and at length sent Catherine home firmly resolved to follow the council given her.

On the following day Catherine once more presented herself at the abode of Hannah, and as soon as she had entered, exclaimed: 'Dear mother, I have told him all! He will be here soon and explain everything to us both.'

'The old woman did not exactly comprehend this. 'Has he not,' said she, 'given any explanation to you?'

'No, Hannah,' said Catherine; 'but oh, he is not guilty. When I spoke to him as you desired me, he was silent for a long time, and he then took me in his arms, Hannah, and kissed me, saying:—

'My darling Catherine, I ought to have confided in you long before. I have been unfortunate, not guilty. Go to Hannah's, and I will soon follow you and set your mind at ease as far as can be done. Had I known how much you have been suffering, I would have done this long before.' These were his words, Hannah. Oh, he may be unfortunate, but not guilty!'

Hannah and Catherine said little to each other until the husband of the latter came to the cottage. William sat down gravely by the side of his wife, and after kindly inquiring for the old woman, at once commenced to tell his story. 'The reason of the unhappy exclamations in sleep,' said he, 'which have weighed so much upon my mind, dear Catherine, may be very soon told. They arose from a circumstance which has very much embittered my own peace, but which, I hope, is to be regarded as a sad calamity rather than a crime. When I entered the army, which I did at the age of nineteen, the recruiting party to which I attached myself, was sent to Scotland where we remained but a few months being ordered again to England in order to be transported to the continent. One unhappy morning as we were passing out of a town where we had rested on our journey, my companions and I chanced to see a girl apparently about fifteen years of age, washing clothes in a tub. Being the most light-hearted, I took up a large stone with the intention of splashing the water against the girl. She stooped hastily, and shocking to tell, when I threw the stone, it struck her on the head, and she fell to the ground, with, I fear, her skull fractured. Stupefied by what I had done, I stood gazing on the stream of blood rushing from my poor victim's head, when my companions, observing that no one had seen us, for it was then early in the morning—hurried me off. We were not pursued, and we were in a few weeks on the continent; but the image of that bleeding girl followed me everywhere: and since I have come home I have never dared to enquire the result, lest suspicion should suffer for murder! For I fear, from the dreadful nature of the blow, that the death of the poor creature lies at my door!'

While Hutton was relating this story, he had turned his eyes to the window, but what was his astonishment as he was concluding, to hear old Hannah cry aloud: 'Thank God! while his wife broke into a hysterical passion of tears and smiles, and threw herself into his arms.'

'My dear husband!' cried she, as soon as her voice found utterance, 'that town was Morpeth?'

'It was,' said he. 'Dear William,' the wife then cried, 'I am that girl!'

'You, Catherine!' cried the amazed and enraptured husband, as he pressed her to his breast.

'Yes,' said old Hannah, from whose eyes tears of joy were fast dropping; 'the girl whom you unfortunately struck was she who is now the wife of your bosom; but your fears magnified the blow. Catherine was found by myself soon after the accident; and though she lost a little blood, and was stunned for a time, she soon got round again. Praise be heaven for bringing about this blessed explanation!'

'Amen,' cried Catherine and her husband. Peace and happiness, as much as usual falls to the happiness of mortals, were the lot of Catherine and her husband from this time forward, their great source of inquietude being thus taken away. The wife even loved the husband more, from the discovery that the circumstances which had caused her distress, were but proof of his extreme tenderness of heart and conscience; and William was attached more strongly to Catherine, after finding her to be the person whom he had unwittingly injured. A new tie, as it were, had been formed between them.—Chamber's Miscellany.

Presence of Mind.

During Lord Exmouth's attack on the batteries of Algiers, in 1816, the Algerines used a great number of red-hot shot, particularly in the early part of the action. On board his Majesty's bomb Infant, one of those comfortable articles came in, through the pursuer's cabin, in the after cockpit; and having bundled a shelf, full of books, on the top of the Assistant Surgeon Jones, who was lying in the pursuer's cot, given over with the Gibraltar fever, it tolled across into the opposite cabin, and was there got into a bucket of water by the gunner and some others stationed near the spot.

This interesting amusement was but just concluded, when the men in the magazine, the door of which was close by, heard a desperate smash among the powder-barrels, and were almost covered with a cloud of loose dust and powder, which was thrown all over them. Knowing the business which had employed the gunner in the cockpit but the instant before, they naturally enough, in the confusion of the moment, called out to him, 'A red-hot shot in the magazine!' and were rushing out of it to circulate wider the same cry, should their new red-hot acquaintance permit them. The ill consequences of this may be easily conceived; the only chance for any one on such an occasion, being to jump at once overboard. The gunner in an instant saw, that if the cry was false, it was folly to spread it; and if true, it was useless; for to kingdom come we must inevitably go. He flew to the magazine, shoved the fellows back into it, and turning the key on them, stood there, with his hand on the lock, till he knew all danger must be past—rather a queerish situation, gentle reader!

The chaps were afterwards a little laughed at; for strange to say, we could not find this intruder on their equanimity of temper any where; and many doubted, at last, if any shot had come into the magazines at all. To be sure there were the broken barrels and the spilled powder in favor of the story, but this seemed still not fully to convince; for even the worst of dangers generally get laughed at when they are over by our happy-go-lucky sons of Neptune. When, however, she came to return her powder into store, after arriving in the Thames, the mystery was solved; it was then found that the said shot had gone through four barrels of powder, and lodged itself very comfortably in the middle of the fifth!

The Origin of Words.

The first derivation we shall advert to is that of the word Ammonia, or rather (Sai) Ammoniac, from which ammonia is prepared. The salt called ammoniac abounds in the refuse of several species of animals, and particularly of camels. Now once upon a time there stood upon the African coast of the Mediterranean, a little to the west of Egypt, a magnificent temple dedicated to the principal deity of the heathen mythology, Jupiter, under his Egyptian surname of Ammon. To this temple crowds of pilgrims used to come from all quarters of the neighborhood consisted in many parts of sandy deserts, large inns were erected here and there for the convenience of the travellers, and the accommodations of the camels, on which they rode.

In the course of this pilgrimage track, the volatile salt alluded to was first discovered, having become concrete in those places where the camels had rested, or by which they had passed. From the deity in whose honor the pilgrimage was made, the substance was called Ammoniac. When the true nature of this salt, and the character of its constituent elements, were long afterwards discovered, the original name was still retained, and was applied to all the numerous compounds of the same substance which were formed by the skill of modern science. Founded on the same basis, the name has ever spread into other sciences besides chemistry, as the mineral Ammonite testifies. Up till a very recent period, all the sal-ammoniac of commerce (technically termed muriate of ammonia) was procured from Egypt, where it was prepared from the refuse of camels and other animals. The chemists of Europe, however, are now able to extract it from several substances, of which soot is one of the principal. On entering a newly swept stable, a powerful odor of ammonia is felt, similar to that of hartshorn, or water impregnated with gaseous ammonia, which last is its natural state.

Singular Names.

In the memorials of the descendants of William Shattuck, lately published by Lemuel Shattuck, Esq., of Boston, we find that Simeon Shattuck, of Fitchburg, named three sons Shadrack, Meshack and Abednego: Abel Shattuck of Coleraine named the male of a pair of twins Truman, and the female Truly; this Truman Shattuck named a girl Truly Ann, and Truly Shattuck named a girl Emeline Truly; Moses Shattuck of Brookline, named four sons since 1800, Asia, Africa, Europe and America; the other odd names in the volume, are Ai, Philabasse, Seraph Seyneda, Sarepta Serada and Thisby Atalia.

Mr Shattuck, in his remarks upon some of these names, says:—'Singularity of taste is not peculiar to our family. We once had under our instruction in Detroit a family whose sons were named One Stickney, Two Stickney, and so on. The three elder children of a family nearer home, were named Joseph, And and Another, and it has been supposed that should they have any more, they might have named them Also, Moreover, Nevertheless and Notwithstanding. Another family actually named their child Finis, supposing it was the last, but they happened to have a daughter and two sons, whom they called Addenda, Appendix and Supplement. Another parent set out to perpetuate the names of the twelve patriarchs, but the mother wept because she had not the wherewithal to bear the last two names.

Home! Sweet Home!

That wide, open, friendly fire-place, with its lively, crackling mirth, or its sweet twilight embers, always appear to me the meet emblem of a contented, great heart, answering back to your own joy, and lighting up your shadows. And sometimes, surrounded by strangers, the object of dull remark, or cold criticism, or ignorant condemnation, how have I pictured to myself a world of warmth like unto the great fire-place at home, where every man should be greeted with 'Welcome! welcome, brother!' and a comfortable, snug corner of his own; and where all answer to each other with the sympathy and cheer of shining faces over the glowing hearth. Look kindly on the stranger, gentle friend, thy looks are either so many sweet, sunny beams, that betoken the common fellowship of humanity, or so many icy rays that chill him to the heart—that freeze little by little the fountains of love—that fill him with distrust of the world and hatred of his species. No man knows how much of others' wickedness and wretchedness he may be held accountable. A look of thine may breed sorrow in thy brother, though a stranger. A look of thine may do a good deed, may shine from thy face to his face, and be reflected, like a ray of sun, over half the globe.

'Live, ye gentle scenes of home! Light up ye bright fires of the domestic hearth! Glow, ye pleasant fancies of the wood fire! Smile ever, ye dimpled portraits of the wall of childhood! Come in, ye sweet little breezes that rustle through the cozy curtains, the blossoms of youth and the airy old cobwebs memory are simmering in your light! Place may change, friends come and go, hearts grow cold or wear away beneath the cloud of the valley, but a pleasant home, where childhood lived and loved, never dies. The memory thereof is a fortune, an indestructible faculty of self-renewing joy.

What is heaven itself but the renewal of fresh hearts and delightful pleasures of childhood's home? A happy child looks forward to a happy home above. The hiring initiated but too early in guilt and misery, or in misery without guilt, he seldom hopes for better accommodation at the journey's end; and the shadow of his childhood descends before him to the grave.

Leaving Home.

Your lot is cast in a far distant land; you must go forth from the home that has witnessed your joys and sorrows for so many years, and among strangers form a new one. Look around for the last time on all that is dear and sacred to you here; enter the library where you have spent so many of your leisure hours; cast your eyes lingeringly and lovingly upon the old book case from which you have drawn your sweetest recreation, look out from the bay window, behind the comfortable curtains of which you have ensconced yourself many a still summer twilight, dreaming rose-colored dreams. You must leave it all now. The fire will burn brightly during the cheerful winter evenings but your eyes will not watch it, the old clock in the corner will tick out the hours but you will not hear it. Another form than yours will find the comfortable rocking chair. Henceforth your home is another's. At a distant wharf a ship lies at anchor; it is about to bear you away to a foreign land, where your future home must be. You are going from the quiet country, with its ever peaceful scenes, to a gay, crowded city; a thousand faces will greet your vision, but not one looks at you, a thousand busy forms will jostle by you, unmindful of your being. You will look for love and sympathy, finding only coldness and unconcern. Sickens may overtake you—if you have wealthy friends, you may not fare badly; if poor, you can go to the hospital, it is a good institution—at least you will try to think so. But I hope you will not need such care, so that you can go bravely to work and build up a home such as you have left, or at least modelled after it.

You will have many troubles and difficulties to overcome, but close your eyes for a moment, and think of that Home of which you have heard so much, and may soon see. You know that it is very beautiful, that the country around is very fair; you have had a glimpse of it already, and being to long for its 'many mansions' and bright flowing streams, on whose borders are leafless trees. But you have not yet 'fought the good fight' nor 'finished the course.' Struggle on yet longer, do your work nobly and well. Life has many a dark day, but it is soon over, and you know better how to value the light and cheer of the next. You may build a beautiful earthly home, for yourself, and strangers may inherit it while you go to the heavenly one, prepared for you. Go forth trustingly and fearlessly to your strife in the wide, wide world, and ever above the clouds and storms of earth keep in view the Saviour's 'sweet home.'

Good Nature.

Good nature is not usually reckoned among the Christian virtues. But it is the nurse of them all. Sunshine is neither a fruit nor a flower, but is the parent of both. What is good nature but benevolence? It bears the same relation to religious benevolence which common sense does to genius. Genius is common sense in a sublime form, applied to higher pursuits. Good nature—a happy, smiling, cheerful state of mind, which will not be offended, and will not offend, borne about in daily life, and pervading common, homely and minute affairs,—it is true benevolence, though the specialties of it may seem small and unimportant. Very few of us need the courage which would face death and carry us to martyrdom. We need a thousand times more those Christian virtues which will keep us from being snatched before breakfast; which will make us patient when some one treads upon a corn; which will quell pride upon petty provocations; that will make us attentive to the feelings of the poor and burable; which will arm us with fortitude against the little frets and bickers of domestic life; or make us kind and forbearing with men that seem harsh and unfair in their dealings with us.

a martyrdom, and cares and annoyances are the silvers and faggots heaped about us for torment. Weariness, discouragement, irritations, disputes, misunderstandings, mean pride and meanness, these are the ruble rout that gather about the victim to help immolate him.

In our day, without doubt, it requires more grace for some men to be good natured—simply and evenly good natured—than it required in some old martyrs to be burnt at the stake. There are coals hotter than any which come from wood. There is smoke more suffocating than any which faggots make. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."—Prov. 16: 32. But it is worth whatever it may cost. It will repay a man in his own spirit. It will make life golden. It is the philosopher's stone that changes dull metal to gold. It will give men power. It is not an ambitious grace, but it is a grace of signal powerfulness. No man has such advantage over others as he whom no man can provoke.—Independent.

BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE.

Indignation Meeting.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of the citizens of this town was held in the Town Hall, Thursday evening, June 5th, "to take into consideration the late outrages in Washington and Kansas." Wm. S. Morton, Esq., was called to the chair.

Hon. Charles F. Adams made a few remarks in allusion to the presence of one person in the meeting that all would be glad to hear, and introduced to the chairman and audience Hon. Josiah Quincy, who, in a written speech of half an hour, gave a brief and pointed statement, of the present state of affairs, with allusions to past events in the history of our country, and the duties of the present day. This speech will be given to the public through the press, and coming from one cotemporary with Washington will be looked for by the whole American people, to whom it is addressed, with great interest.

Rev. Wm. P. Lunt followed in a very eloquent speech which fairly electrified the audience and was received with immense applause.

Hon. Charles F. Adams, also made a very pertinent speech which was loudly applauded. Mr. John Q. Adams, son of Hon. Charles F. Adams, took the audience by surprise, and proved most conclusively that we have not seen "the last of the Adamses."

Speeches were also made by Rev. Messrs. Clark, Rice and Bradley, which, judging by the effect upon the audience, were exactly to the point.

Mr. Bradley alluded to his native state (S.C.) in touching terms, and when he said he was ashamed of her, the audience expressed their approbation in most rapturous applause. His appeal to the freemen of Massachusetts was most forcible and solemn, and sunk deeply in the hearts of his hearers.

G. F. Thayer, Esq., gave us two of his characteristic speeches, which always please. Mr. Henry A. Walker spoke most eloquently; and the young men of Quincy will go far to find a more earnest and ready speaker to express their sentiments.

Mr. Freeman M. Walker also made a very neat and appropriate speech.

Maj. Thomas C. Webb spoke of some of the acts of the last Legislature, especially the Personal Liberty Bill, and made some indirect allusions to the American Party.

A statement of the present condition of public affairs and Resolutions presented by Hon. Charles F. Adams, were sustained by Josiah Brigham, Esq., and passed by a unanimous vote.

It was on the whole the most hearty and bold and determined meeting of the kind of which we have seen any report.

MILITARY ELECTION.—At the late choice of a Lieutenant Colonel of the Fourth Regiment, made at North Bridgewater, on the 24th ult. Brig. Gen. E. W. Pierce, presiding, Capt. Abner B. Packard, of the Hancock Light Guards, Quincy, was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Lieut. Col. J. F. Winslow, of Abington, as aid-de-camp to General Pierce.

A correspondent of the Boston Herald, thus speaks of the military of this town.

The Hancock Light Guard, under Capt. Packard, have earned a high reputation for correct discipline and fine soldiery bearing when under arms, and the compliment of a comendatory to its accomplished commander is eminently merited and deserving. Lieut. Col. Packard possesses a fine, commanding person, gentlemanly address, and has the head and heart of a true soldier.

FOURTH OF JULY. All that contemplate celebrating the glorious Fourth, will please notice the advertisement of Messrs. Sanderson & Laegeran, the well known Pyrotechnists to the city of Boston. They are prepared to furnish their superior Colored Fire Works in any design or in any quantity desired—they are the most extensive Pyrotechnists in the United States.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, June 8, 1856.

The Democratic Convention at Cincinnati: its discordant elements.—Organization.—Uncertainty as to the Presidential nominee.—Washington items.—Mr. Sumner.—Mr. Brooks.—General Wilson.—Mr. Crampton in Boston.—England and the United States.—Kansas.—State Legislature.

The Democratic National Convention has been in session since Monday last, at Cincinnati, and have made little progress, except organization. Hon. John E. Ward, of Georgia is president, with one vice president from each state. The proceedings of this great Convention so far, have not been harmonious; there being two sets of delegates from several states; each claiming seats, and this is often a vexatious question to settle in political conventions for the nominating of candidates for high offices. Upon the balloting for Presidential nominee, it is supposed General Pierce will lead off on the first ballot, but not be able to reach two-thirds of the votes of the Convention, a rule which will without doubt be adopted. Mr. Buchanan will stand the next highest on the list, and will probably gain upon repeated trials. But it is not improbable all the prominent candidates will be dropped at the end of the week, and some gentleman nominated, now hardly thought of. This will be the most likely method to heal differences of opinions as to men, in the Convention, and bring about a strong concentration of strength on the lucky nominee. To be successful, the American people must believe that he is a Unionist and Constitutional; knowing in truth, no North or South in the administration of national affairs. From present indications the slavery question is to be the grand issue. The Democratic nominee, must take the Federal Constitution for his guide in this all absorbing matter; non-interference with domestic slavery in the states, and the non-extension of it in any territory where the national government has jurisdiction. The free states will ask nothing less, and require nothing more. Our machinery of government made up of checks and balances, tolerate the existence of slavery in the states, if the people of those states desire it; but gives no encouragement for its extension by any Congressional legislation. If we attempt to draw anything constructively from the National compact, the converse of the proposition is more apparent, that slavery should be restricted rather than propagated.

Washington is almost deserted at the present moment, a part of the Representatives having returned home on a brief visit, or are present at the Convention at Cincinnati.

Mr. Sumner we are happy to learn is recovering and may be expected in Massachusetts soon. His assessor, Mr. Brooks, has gone to Ohio, where if he is known, will not be likely to meet with a cordial reception. He deserves expulsion from the House, but through the operation of some questions of parliamentary privilege may escape this merited rebuke.

General Wilson is on a visit to Boston and has every where been met with cordiality. The Boston Post speaks in laudatory terms of his course in refusing Mr. Brooks' challenge to fight a duel. Under any other circumstances, the General is ready for Mr. Brooks.

The British Minister, Mr. Crampton, is here, and is the object of no little attraction. He will soon sail for England. The better opinion here is, that his dismissal will not lead to a war with Great Britain but merely a temporary suspension of diplomatic intercourse. When the news of Mr. Crampton's dismissal reaches England, Mr. Dallas, our Envoy there will doubtless receive his passports and come home.

The rumors that daily float over the telegraphic wires, relating to Kansas troubles, are so conflicting that we know not what to believe. At one time the pro-slavery party is charged with the commission of murder and high outrages, and the next intelligence is, that the free state men, or party in opposition to the territorial government, are shooting down their enemies on all sides. One thing is certain, there is culpability on both sides, and history will show which party is "more sinned against than sinning." The admission of Kansas as a state is the only remedy for the troubles. Nothing else will answer. Where is Congress on this subject?

The subject is now fairly before them, and for the safety of the country should be forthwith acted upon. Her admission as a sovereign independent state is the only specific remedy for her present sorrows and tribulations.

The extraordinary long session of our state Legislature is the topic of severe comment, and the people, their masters, are getting uneasy. As the pay roll is made up to Saturday next, they will probably go home after a session of one hundred and sixty-one days, the longest I believe ever held in Massachusetts. In my next and last letter, I will endeavor to notice the principal general Acts passed in 1856.

NEMO.

NOMINATION of Mr. Buchanan by the Democratic party at Cincinnati, as their standard bearer in the approaching fall election. On the 17th ballot it was nearly unanimous.

For the Patriot.

Tempest in a Tea Pot.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, who signs himself a Democrat, (heaven save the mark,) takes me severely to task for a brief notice which appeared in your paper of the 17th ult., in reference to a work recently published, entitled; 'Seaboard Slave States,' for my extreme ignorance and superlative dulness in crediting it as an English instead of an American production. We can only say, we took the author's own words for it, which we considered very good authority, and if anything more is wanted, the work itself will bear throughout evident marks of such an origin. But this is a trite affair, and one to which we are perfectly indifferent, we will therefore pass it by to consider another, of a graver and more serious nature. Democrat says, he has made the happy discovery from certain remarks of ours, that we are nothing more nor less than a "Pimp of the miserable negro drivers." Considering the "honorable" source from which this chaste and classic sentiment emanates, we at once plead guilty to the soft insinuation; and further, that we are a full grown "Dough face," and glory in being a Northern man with Southern principles, as interpreted by Abolitionists. As a citizen of the Union, we hold that one part of the country claims our allegiance as much as another; the North as much as the South—the South as the North; we are no sectionalists—may it ever be our lot to be preserved from such a calamity. These are our principles, given in good faith, and which we shall always fearlessly and openly maintain, notwithstanding what disorganizers may say to the contrary. It is time the working classes, whose every hope lies in the peace and preservation of the Union, should take this matter seriously in hand, and cut adrift from the professional drones and unprincipled demagogues who are the festering sores of society, contaminating every thing they touch. All our troubles in Kansas, and the disgraceful scenes which have called forth the nation's indignation, may be traced to this cause. It is the duty therefore, of every friend of his country to discountenance the doings of these mischief makers, and drive them upon other resources for a livelihood.

Your correspondent draws largely upon our credulity when he asserts that he ranks with the "honorable" of the community. This we take is a mere fancy of his which the community would like to have him correct.

We might follow this subject still farther, but have neither the time nor the inclination; we shall therefore leave for the present this new fledged democrat to his own reflections and the merited contempt which will soon overtake him from a confiding but deceived people.

CRAM'S DRESSING ROOMS, BOSTON.—The Editor of the Worcester Mercury, and he is a very good judge in these matters, as his own neat appearance fully attests, thus speaks in a late number of his paper of this justly celebrated Bathing, Shaving and Hair Dressing Saloon, corner of Brattle Street and Brattle Square, Boston:

Go to Cram's if you want a cold, hot, or shower bath. This part of Mr. Cram's extensive business is conducted in a liberal and entirely satisfactory manner; tubs, large and neat, plenty of clean towels, rooms well ventilated, attendance prompt and polite.

Go to Cram's if you wish to be shaved, or have your hair dressed in fine style, and highest artistic skill.

Go to Cram's if you wish your hair colored a perfect brown, or black, by his hair dye, which is superior to any article ever invented for the purpose.

Go to Cram's if you wish a vegetable hair preservative, which is unrivalled, and of the most efficacious articles ever invented for eradicating dirt and dandruff, and for its power to restore, cleanse and beautify the hair; also to remove headache, &c., &c.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The Emperor Alexander II. will be crowned Czar of Russia at Moscow, on the 31st of August, being the fete of his patron saint. The expense will be about two and one-half millions of dollars.

Gerritt Smith offers ten thousand dollars of a million to be raised for aid to the free settlers in Kansas.

It is estimated that not less than two hundred and fifty slaves have escaped from Virginia and Kentucky during the month of February, 1856.

Hon. John M. Niles died in Hartford, Conn., on Saturday last, aged 69 years. He was Postmaster General under Mr. Van Buren, and had been a Senator in Congress.—He had just returned from New York City, where it was said he had been cured by a cancer doctor.

Great preparations are making by the Masonic fraternity for the celebration of St. John's Day, at Montpelier, (Vt.) on the 27th of June.

Dr. Kane has declined to take command of Lady Franklin's new expedition to find, if possible, the remains of her husband and the relics of his ships. He does so from inability to get his previous engagements off his hands so as to be ready in season to set sail

A SUBSCRIBER (whom we suspect to be some narrow minded Leech) asks us why we advertise Dr. Ayer's Pills, and we will give him our seven reasons for so doing. The first, second and third are that we are paid for it. The fourth is we know them by experience to be good. The fifth is that Dr. Ayer's preparations being recommended by better men than we—by physicians of the highest talent and the deepest learning in the land, we are well sustained in our own convictions of their value. The six is that they are cheap as well as useful. The last but not least is that they have done and are doing an amount of good in this community, which our old foggy friend if he could repeat himself ten thousand times might never hope to equal, and we trust by making them known to render some service to our readers as well as ourselves.—Christian Advocate.

DR. STONE'S LIQUID CATHARTIC. Somebody says that the Americans consume more medicine than any other nation in the world, and the assertion is undoubtedly true; for, besides supporting an army of physicians—"regulars" and "quacks"—we swallow every kind of nostrum that is put into the market, no matter whether it comes from a wise man or a fool. There are, however, several standard medicines, which, the longer they are used, the more popular they become; and among this number, we know of none that so well enjoys the confidence of the public as Dr. Stone's Liquid Cathartic. It is particularly recommended for rheumatism, neuralgia, pains in the head, side, stomach, and the various diseases of the summer and autumn months; and especially is it used for the eradication of humors from the blood.—American Citizen, Lowell.

Deaths.

In Boston, on the 23d ult., Mr. George M. Briscoll, aged 52 years.

In Sauborton, (N. H.), on the 18th ult., Mr. William W. Whitcher, aged 31 years.

into the Room. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhoea, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side, the skin, and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhoea, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to neglect such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RICKETS, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by these Pills, which they affect to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in small doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely. As a DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more efficacious for the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera, to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease.

An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown, that they are the most powerful and safe of all cathartics, and that they are the only ones which do not operate by the action of the bowels, but by the action of the stomach, liver, and other organs of the body.

Poetry.

The Wherewithal.

A man may have wisdom and worth,
And humor and wit at his call,
But what do these matter on earth,
If he has not the wherewithal?
His home may be circled with friends,
If he only can keep the ball;
But friendship soon changes and ends
If he has not the wherewithal.
Then seek for the wherewithal—
Make sure of the wherewithal.
For pleasure, like friendship, soon ends
If you have not the wherewithal.

The purse is the dial, whose face
Shows best where the sunlight doth fall,
He always is first in the race,
Who is first with the wherewithal?
Some say that the high can be mean—
Some hint that the great can be small;
But trifles like these are not seen,
If he has not the wherewithal!
Then seek for the wherewithal—
Make sure of the wherewithal.
For pleasure, like friendship, soon ends
If you have not the wherewithal!

The Erring.

Speak not in anger, if from sin
You would an erring brother win;
If you a sinner would reclaim,
A wild and reckless spirit tame—
Be gentle, modest, pleasant word—
And kind emotions will be stirred.
A brother, when he goes astray,
Is more determined on the way,
When he beholds an angry face,
And never may his steps refrain;
But when he sees a tearful eye,
Turns back with deep humility.

Pretty Home Song.

Now thrust my thumb in the case,
And store the spoils away,
And lay the muslin robe in place;
My task is done to-day.
For, like the workman's evening bell,
A sound hath met my ears,
The gate creaks by the street door tell—
Papa hath come, my dear.
Bear off the toy box from the floor,
For yonder dear make room;
And up, and out, unbolt the door,
And breathe his welcome home;
For 'tis the twilight hour of joy,
When home's best pleasures rally;
And I will clasp my darling boy,
While papa rumps with Alice.

Look at Home.

Should you feel inclined to censure
Pauls you may in others view,
Ask your own heart, ere you venture,
If that has not failings too.
Let not friendly words be broken
Rather strive to ease our gain;
Many a word in anger spoken
Finds its passage home again.
Do not, then, in idle pleasure,
Tattle with a brother's fame;
Guard it as a valued treasure,
Sacred as your own good name.
Do not form opinions blindly—
Hastiness to trouble leads—
Those of whom we've thought unkindly
Oft become our warmest friends.

Anecdotes.

'Why don't you hold your head as I do?'
said an aristocratic lawyer to a sterling old farmer. 'Squire,' was the reply, 'look at that field of grain. You see that all the valuable heads are bowed down, while those that have nothing in them stand upright.'

A poor widow woman was relating to a neighbor, how fond her husband was of having a good fire; how busy he would make himself in fixing it so that it would burn—
'Ah, poor dear man,' she continued, 'I hope he's gone where they keep good fires.'

A gentleman at a fashionable assembly being asked which of the ladies he thought the most beautiful, replied—'Why, madam, they are all beautiful; but that lady, I think,' pointing to Miss Bunce, who was dressed in the extreme of fashion, 'outstrips them all.'

A peddler overtook another of his tribe, on the road, and thus accosted him—'Hallo, friend, what do you carry?' 'Rum and whiskey,' was the reply. 'Good!' said the other; 'You may go ahead, I carry gravestones.'

Rogers once observed to a Scotch lady,
'How desirable it is in any danger to have presence of mind.' 'I would rather,' she re-

AYER'S

PILLS
Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.
JULIUS HAZEL, Esq., the well known perfumer of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose choice products are found at almost every toilet, says:
'I am happy to say of your CATARRHIC PILLS, that I have found them a better family medicine, for common use, than any other within my knowledge. Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and coincide with me in believing that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effectual, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which must make them valued by the public,
when they are known.'

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Baltimore, 15th April, 1854:
'Dr. J. C. Ayer—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which has of late years overtaken
me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family
for coughs and colds with unfailing success. You make medicine which is perfectly safe and not unpleasant to be taken—for the good you have done and are doing.'

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co.,
says:
'Pa. R. R. Office, Philadelphia, Dec. 13, 1853.
'I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Catarrhic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will permit taking them. The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of Wentworth, N. H., writes:
'Having used your CATARRHIC PILLS in my practice, I certify from experience that they are an invaluable curative in cases of disordered functions of the liver, causing headache, indigestion, costiveness, and the great variety of diseases that follow, they are a surer remedy than any
I know. In all cases where a purgative remedy is required, I confidently recommend these Pills to the public, as superior to any other I have ever found. They are sure in their operation, and perfectly safe—qualities which make them an invaluable article for public use. I have for many years known your Cherry Pectoral as the best Cough medicine in the world, and these Pills are in no wise inferior to that admirable preparation for the treatment of diseases.'

'Acton, Me., Nov. 25, 1852.
'Dr. J. C. Ayer—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted from my birth with scrofula in its worst form, and now, after twenty years trial, and an untold amount of suffering, I have been completely cured in a few weeks by your Pills.
With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be imagined when you realize what I have suffered, and how long.
'Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and made me almost blind, besides the unendurable pain; at others it settled in the scalp of my head, and destroyed my hair, and has kept me partly bald all my days; sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months a raw sore.
'About nine weeks ago I commenced taking your Cat-arrhic Pills, and now an entirely free from the complaint.
My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair has commenced a healthy growth; all of which makes me feel already a new person.
'Hoping this statement may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude,
Yours, &c.,
MARIA RICKER.'

'I have known the above named Maria Ricker from
her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.'
ANDREW J. MESERVE,
Owner of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co., Care of J. E. PRATT, of the ship Mariner, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:
'Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the liver, which had been very serious. I had failed of any relief by my Physician, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have given them to my children for worms, with the best effect. They were promptly cured. I recommend your Pills to a friend for colic, which had troubled him for months; he told me in a few days they had cured him.
You make the best medicine in the world; and I am free to say so.'

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have long been well known, not only in this but the neighboring States.
'New Orleans, 5th April, 1854.
'Sir: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and family have been very much benefited by your medicines. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous cough, by your Cherry Pectoral, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have several times been cured from the most distressing cough and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. Your CATARRHIC PILLS have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia which costiveness, and growing upon me for some years, indeed, this cure is much more important, from the fact that I had failed to obtain relief from the best Physicians which this section of the country affords, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken.
'You seem to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you may well suppose we are not unmindful of it, and you may rest assured we are not ungrateful.
LEAVITT THAXTER.'

'Senate Chamber, Ohio, April 30, 1854.
'Dr. J. C. Ayer—Honored Sir: I have been afflicted throughout the CATARRHIC PILLS, left me by your agent, and have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism under which he found me suffering. The first dose relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel in better health now than for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your CATARRHIC PILLS. Yours with great respect, LUCIUS B. MEALY.'

The above are all from persons who are publicly known where they reside, and who would not make these statements without a thorough conviction that they were true.

The Kennebec Sloop.

BY J. H. INGRAHAM.

The River Kennebec, in Maine, is, without a rival in New England, either for its historic associations or the beauty of its natural scenery. It rises among the passes of the Highlands, that forms the northeast boundary line between the United States and Canada, and after flowing through a romantic region for many leagues, enters a valley of surpassing beauty, through which it meanders between level intervals of the richest verdure.

The capital of the State, Augusta, is on this river, as are also several flourishing villages, and Bath, a flourishing town, sixteen miles from the mouth of the river. It is in the vicinity of Bath, and one of the fortresses at the mouth of the river, that we lay the scene of our story.

There is a fortress near the mouth of this river, just on the skirts on the sea, called Fort Hancock. It is now dismantled, and is a celebrated resort in July weather for the Kennebeckers. It was erected during the last war to defend the entrance to the river. It is situated on a low beach, which, half a mile northward, is surmounted by a bold headland a hundred feet in height, on which also from the ruins of an old battery. The scenery around is made up of rock island, the ocean spreading its bosom away south-eastwardly, ever and forever, heaving as if it were earth's great heart! A few fishermen's huts dot the sides of the shores, and the tower of Seguin Light glitters white upon the porpoise-shaded island. The fisher's skiff rocks lightly on the sea, and upon the hazy horizon rests a sail or two, so distant that they seem fixed like shining pinnacles of white marble lifting their tops above the ocean.

At the period of our story, which was near the close of the last war, two British armed vessels had been cruising off the river for several days, occasionally running close in with the fort, so as to draw its fire, and then tacking and standing seaward again. One of these vessels was a sloop-of-war, and the other a brig of sixteen guns. They effectually blockaded the river, and for some time no vessels had either come out or gone in.

Everything was brought to, even to the small fishing boat, and the strictest vigilance was maintained from the first day of their arrival on the coast. One morning in June, just as sun was rising from the sea, flinging his fiery spear far across the sparkling waves, kindling up every object upon which they lit, the two English vessels were seen standing towards the mouth of the river, under top gallant sails, with the wind free on the starboard quarter. They were about half a mile apart, their courses converging to a point. The point was a small Kennebeck sloop, hugging the land, and endeavoring to make the entrance of the river. Her broad mainsail was flung to the wind like a great white wing, and she was sweeping across the water like a gull flying before a storm. She had been discovered by the cruisers only a few minutes before, when they tacked together, and pressed after her to intercept her, making sail as they went. Fifteen minutes more of the obscurity of the morning, and the adventurous sloop would have got into the river and under the guns of the fort, unseen, or seen too late to be cut off.

It was a beautiful sight to behold the three vessels in motion, one small, unarmed, and with but three sails to help her flight, bounding along close under the land—others tall, frowning with batteries, and covered with canvas from deck to truck.

The sloop was two miles in shore of the cruisers; and about the same distance westward of the harbor—being when discovered, just stealing round the cape Small Point. She had, therefore, the same distance to run to gain shelter, that her pursuers had to come up with her present condition.

The cruisers stood on for about five minutes after tacking in the same converging lines, when the corvette signaled the brig, which immediately luffed and bore up four points eastward, while the former kept her first course. The object had in view by his maneuver of the brig, it was plainly evident to the fishermen, who, from the rocks on which their huts perched, were watching with interest the pursuing and the pursued, was to intercept her, for they had quickly discovered that a direct chase would be ineffectual, as the sloop showed herself to be a very fast sailer. So the brig stood straight towards the mouth, hoping to reach it in advance of the sloop, while the sloop-of-war kept on to capture her if she should turn back and attempt to run in between Harswell or Portland.

'We shall be tuk, darned if we ain't Deacon,' coolly remarked a tall, ungainly youth of nineteen, who, with a dipper fastened to a ten foot handle, was bailing up water from the sea and throwing it over the mainsail of the sloop, to swell the threads of the canvas and make it better hold the wind.

As he spoke, he paused in his work, leaned upon his long dipper handle, and shutting one eye, took a deliberate survey of the two cruisers.

'Not so long as two timbers of the Polly Ann hold together, Siah,' responded the Deacon, who grasped the helm, and who with one eye ahead and the other watching the enemy, directed the course of his little vessel towards the shelter he sought.

'If we'd only had another ten minutes afore sun up, we'd got in. But the day ain't goin' to stop for any man, and I don't 'spect it to. All we must do is to keep the Polly out of the hands 'o the Brits, now they've got their eyes on us. Wet the sails, Siah! keep wettin' 'em.'

'I guess they kin't guess what we've got aboard, Deacon,' said Siah, as he cast a shower of spray over the mainsail. 'They seem to take all-fired trouble to catch us. See how Polly jumps! The way she tosses water with her bows, I won't have to wet her jib; she does that herself.'

'If we don't get into the river, and them chaps over haul us what in nater's to be done, Deacon!'

'It won't do to let 'em capture the six big guns and two barrels of powder and ton of shot that we've got for the fort,' he said very decidedly, Captain, or rather Deacon Paul Butterfield, who both owned and commanded the Holly which had been a few days before engaged by the Government agent at Boston to convey arms and ammunition to Fort Hancock. This enterprise the Deacon (for he was a lawful deacon in his own town, which was Hallowell, forty miles up the river) had cheerfully undertaken assuring the agent he could get Polly Ann safely into the rivers, in spite of the cruisers. Shrewd, bold, and cool, the Deacon saw that by running only in the night, and hugging the shore, he should probably be able to get into the Kennebec undiscovered, especially as the cruisers used to stand off shore at night a league or two for offing and run in again at sunrise.

The agent felt that a small coasting vessel with so skillful a captain as Deacon Butterfield, would be quite as likely to get into the river as a large one, if not more so and gave him the commission.

For the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, the Deacon had bargained to take the cannons and the munitions to the Kennebec, and also bound himself if there was any danger of being captured, to scuttle the sloop and sink her. We now see him thus far in progress of his enterprise.

The cannons were long battery thirty-two six in number, and was laid athwart ships, side by side upon the deck. The shot were piled forward, and in the forecabin of the ship was stowed the powder in casks; and securely protected under canvas: tarpaulins also covered the guns.

'If we can only stand on ten minutes more, Siah,' said the Deacon to his mate.

'I don't fear them as cruisers a stick. One on 'um you see has luffed, to try to cut us off. If twasn't for this playguy heavy old iron we've got in her, I'd show enemy how to make a keel cut blue water through! but we must get in, Lot,' he added turning to a rugged old man, who comprised all his crew, and who was now engaged in tending the main sheet the slack of which he had in his iron fist.

'It's to get in safely, Deacon,' answered Don Bissell gruffly, 'and get two hundred and fifty dollars, or it's sink the sloop, and no insurance.'

'That's a fact, Mr. Bissell,' responded the Yankee skipper with emphasis; and shifting his tobacco from the larboard to the starboard cheek, he glanced under the main boom to see how the fort and shore lay, and then have his eye to the windward and took a deliberate inspection of the enemy.

'Give a small pull aft on the main sheet, Mr. Bissell; Siah, haul aft that jib a bit! The Brits is smoking his pipe!' added the skipper quietly, as he saw a jet of smoke belched from the bows of the sloop-of-war. He had hardly got the words out of his mouth, when a boom of a gun reached their ears, and simultaneously a shot passed whizzing over their heads.

'I don't stand that are!' said Siah in a very determined tone, which singularly contrasted with his awkward, rustic exterior. 'Give me leave, Deacon, and I'll give them a shot back, darned if I don't!'

'Your gun want scare 'em, Siah. Ease off the main sheet, Lot. Be ready to doge; for I guess there'll be another one 'o them junks of iron this way. They ain't no pilot, or they wouldn't keep so close to Porpoise Rock Ledge.'

Cool and steady the skipper stood at his post, and directed the course of the little craft. All at once he gave a loud hurrah! The sloop-of-war had struck, under full sail, upon a rock, bare at low water, known as Porpoise Ledge, and everything was taken aback, with her main-royal mast and yard over the side.

'That is for not taken a pilot on a strange coast,' said the skipper, dryly, while his keen little eyes fairly glistened with pleasure; but he made no demonstrations of joy—but after a second glance at the sloop-of-war, and seeing that matters on board of her were in too much confusion for them to trouble themselves any further about him, he now gave his whole attention to the brig, which was about a mile and a half from him in a straight line, and about equally distant from the entrance to the river.

Upon seeing the accident that had occurred to her consort, she bore down a little and hoisted a signal. It was responded to on board the sloop, when the brig resumed her course.

'The sloop-of-war, I suppose says she don't want aid—so the brig is left at liberty to intercept us,' said the skipper. 'It looks as if she would be likely to get to the entrance as soon as the Polly, and then I guess it's all up with us. But I don't give up so long as a timber hangs to her, or I can have a limb to hold on to the tiller by. But what in nater are you doing there, Siah?'

Well might the Deacon ask this question. The ambitious young Kennebecer had bro't from the forecabin a keg of powder, and was tying some half a peck of it up in a bandana handkerchief, which he had taken from his neck.

'Doin'? I am going to give 'em a gun, darn'd if I ain't! If them there guns is got to go to Davy's locker, I'll get one fire out 'em first, I guess!'

As Siah spoke he threw down a movable section of the bulwark amidships, leaving an open space to the sea, before the muzzles of three of the enormous cannons that lay across the deck. He then took up his huge cartridge and putting it into the muzzle of one of them, began to ram it down with a hand-spike.

'What on airth is the critter at?' cried the Deacon. Siah made no reply; but having rammed the cartridge home, he rolled a thirty-two pound shot toward it, and giving it a lift, shoved it into the muzzle after the powder.

'Now for priming her, and then I guess if I don't give 'em a Fourth o' July salute they never heered one!'

As he spoke he poured a handful of powder upon the vent, and then jumping to the caboose, caught up a lighted pine-knot and waving it to keep it bright, approached the gun.

'Stop, Siah, stop!' shouted the skipper at the top of his voice, 'you'll blow the Polly Ann to Jerico, if you fire that are gun aboard on her!'

'I don't calkate I'll be took pris'n'r by the Brits, Deacon, and be put in Dartmoor, I guess! I don't mean to fire just yet but take a chance for a good air, and then give 'em saltpetre!'

'I'll shake every bone out o' the Polly!' said the Captain in alarm.

As he spoke, the brig, now within a mile distance, fired a shot across her bows.

'That means heave to, Lot,' said the skipper; 'Siah, put out that pine knot.'

'I mean to by 'nby, Deacon. Wait till I get a shot at them! I ain't afeer'd o' hurtin' the sloop a bit! You just yaw her a little bit, and bring the muzzle o' my artillery piece agin the brig, and if I don't show them how a Yankee gun can speak, I don't want to see the inside o' Kennebec river again?'

A second gun came from the brig, and the shot passed within ten feet of the Deacon's head, made a rent a fathom long in his mainsail, and the shock caused his peak halyards to part, and let the peak of his mainsail down.

This cause the sloop to fall of a point or two; and while the skipper, unflinching, and with a quiet look was trying to bring her to the wind again, Siah, taking advantage of a moment as she swung in, which his loaded gun bore upon the brig, instantly applied the torch to the vent! The roar, flame and the concussion were terrific.

The little vessel reeled under the recoil of the vast gun, till the waves poured in over her bows and stern. The skipper and Lot were laid flat upon the deck, while Siah found himself hanging by the heels in the lee shrouds.

For a few moments the Deacon thought his vessel would go down, she wallowed and plunged so—but she soon steadied herself, though with her deck flooded, her jib blown away, and windlass unshipped.

'I guess if they got the shot it'll settle 'em,' said Siah, as he dropped feet first out of the rigging, into which he had been blown upon deck, and tried to see through the smoke.

'You ought to be settled, you tarnal critter!' cried the Deacon enraged; 'you like to have sunk her, darn ye!'

'Don't swear Deacon! I want to see if the brig got it.'

'Got it, you fool! I guess you'll get it if I ever see smoke again.'

As the smoke rolled away, the brig was discovered, no longer standing down, but knocking about at the mercy of the waves and wind, her foremast gone by the board, and dragging over the side with all its yards and sails. The shot had cut off her mast within ten feet of the deck!

'Siah was perfectly confounded, but manifested no surprise, while the Deacon and Lot set up a loud hurra of triumph.

'Why, what is the matter! Why don't you halloo?' said the Deacon, taking breath.

'Cos it ain't nothing more'n what I meant to do,' responded Siah, with imitable coolness; 'I ain't surprised, if you be, Deacon.'

In twenty minutes more, the sloop with her valuable cargo was safely sheltered under the guns of Fort Hancock. The sloop-of-war lay under the rocks till the next tide, and the brig lay by her, rigging a jury-mast. Before sunset, both vessels made sail, and steered eastward on the way towards Halifax, to repair damages. Thus the blockade was raised to the relief of the commerce of the river.

Siah is now one of the most popular captains.

How Coal was Made.

Geology has proved that, at one period, there existed an enormously abundant land vegetation, the ruins or rubbish of which, carried into the seas, and there sank to the bottom, and afterwards covered by sand and mud beds, became the substance which we now recognize as coal. This was a natural transaction of vast consequence to us, see how much utility we find in coal, both for warming our dwellings and for various manufactures, as well as the production of steam, by which so great a mechanical power is generated. It may naturally excite surprise that the vegetable remains should have so completely changed their apparent character, and become black. But this can be explained by chemistry; and part of the marvel becomes clear to the simplest understanding when we recall the familiar fact that damp hay, thrown closely into a heap, gives out heat, and becomes of a dark color.

When a vegetable mass is excluded from the air, and subjected to great pressure, a bituminous fermentation is produced, and the result is the mineral coal—which is of various characters, according as the mass has been originally intermingled with sand, clay, or other earthly impurities. On account of the change effected by mineralization, it is difficult to detect in coal the traces of a vegetable structure; but these can be made clear in all except the highly bituminous caking coal, by cutting or polishing it down into thin, transparent slices, when the microscope shows the fibres and cells very plainly.

From distinct isolated specimens found in the sand stones amidst the coal beds, we discovered the nature of the plants of this era. They are almost all of a simple cellular structure, and such as exist with us in small forms, (horse tails, club masses and fens), but advanced to an enormous magnitude. The species are long since extinct.

The vegetation generally is such as now grows in clusters of tropical islands; but it must have been the result of a high temperature obtained otherwise than that of the tropical regions now is, for the coal strata are now found in the temperate and even the polar regions.

The conclusion, therefore, to which most geologists have arrived is that the earth, originally and down, until, in the carboniferous period, it fostered a growth of terrestrial vegetation all over its surface, to which the existing jungles of the tropics are mere barrenness in comparison. The high and uniform temperature, combined with greater incandescent or highly heated mass, slowly cooled proportion of carbonic acid gas in the manufacture, could not only sustain a gigantic and prolific vegetation, but would also create dense vapors, showers and rain; and these again, gigantic rivers, periodical inundations, and deltas. Thus, all the conditions for extensive deposits of wood in estuaries would arise from this high temperature; and every circumstance connected with the coal measures points to such conditions.

The Yankee Woman.

When a Yankee woman goes to ride with her children she considers it necessary to keep them from falling out—puts one foot on one child and the other foot on another—holds baby in one hand and carpet bag in the other.

Rises—budget in hand, and change in her mouth, two minutes before the cars come to a stop.

Give her a morning call—she will peep through the side-light, at the ring of the door-bell; if you are a peddler she will make her appearance and give you an answer. If you are a minister she will slip on a pretty dress and cordially receive you into the parlor.

The Yankee woman bakes, brews and fries, in the forenoon; makes the button holes in the afternoon; snatches half an hour after supper, for practising on the piano; makes calls or attends lectures in the evening.

Does up the summer sewing in the winter, for the chance of doing the winter sewing in the summer.

Spends a week in the mysteries of pastry salads and creams; and, at the last moment, makes curls, draws on gloves, and appears as hostess for a brilliant party. Never mind those colored waiters—they are only hired for show—like the chandeliers—they never performed a bit of hard labor for this party, it was all done by the Yankee lady.

How do European ladies manage?

Don't know. I happen to be a Yankee. In the midst of the multiplicity of roasting, baking, boiling, scrubbing and polishing, the Yankee woman always manages to send the children to school with clean faces and aprons.

When Tom rushes in, pantaloons torn, she puts him to bed till they are mended.

Makes her own bonnet, and leaves her neighbors to their conjectures whether it came from Clapp's or Kenson's—also whether the cost was five dollars or fifteen.

Wears the last baby in season for the arrival of the next.

If no Irishman be handy, or money be tight, she digs out the cellar herself, and you will see the result of that economy, next month, in the top flounce of a new dress.

The Yankee woman can talk, let her little boy be accused of quarrelsomeness in the streets, and won't she give you a call? and won't she entertain you for one hour and a half? can you get in ten words edgewise?

The Yankee woman will have her poetry in life; she will get it somewhere; if she cannot play on the piano, she will work points on the neck of her little girl's frock, or at least have the brightest tins and whitest tables in the country, most likely she will command piano, embroiders and bright tins, all three.

The Yankee woman has her thoughts about her; the Yankee woman understands cost and income, too; don't the shopman have to take down every piece of goods from his shelves, before she will decide concerning half a yard of cambric?

Does she ever offer the baker a ninepence when the price is twelve cents?

She never has to ask the milkman the amount of his quarterly bill—ten chances to one if there be any bill. The Yankee woman is good at cash; she hates bills of one kind; bills of another kind she hugs and cherishes.

The Mission of the Newspaper.

The world is too apt to slight and forget its obligation to the Newspaper. 'Tis the Newspaper that keeps men posted up on all matters and on all subjects that do not pass under their own immediate observation.

The eye of the newspaper is universal—it falls on all parts of the world, and searches out its incidents, as well as the motives and passions that control its movements. Nothing is too great nothing too trivial to escape its keen, penetrating glance; it is everywhere—on everybody; above, below, around it—the four quarters of the earth are its parade ground; and it passes over them every moment of each day. It is ceaseless in its industry—tireless in its watchfulness; and, although gossip in its character, it is vigilant at times, penetrative as light, and sleepless as the stars.

Each succeeding dawn comes not with more regularity than the morning journal with the fresh batch of news despatches from all parts of the world. The thoughts, positions, incidents and movements of individuals and of nations, are presented in its columns, as in a mirror—the reflex of the thoughts and progress of man and the world. He who reads carefully a well-conducted Newspaper, is never in any danger of falling behind the age. His journal keeps him posted up in every thing running on with the great march of time; it gradually prepares his mind to receive all the new discoveries of the human brain in its rapid strides to clear and unclouded intelligence; it weans him from old fashions, old customs, and old fogy thoughts; it separates him from early prejudice, and gradually imbues him with sound practical notions, and enables him to fathom the heaviest and most abstruse subjects with the plummet of common sense; it keeps him alive to all the new progressive steps in Trade, Commerce, Literature and Art; it makes him familiar with the details of all the events transpiring in no matter what part of the world, or the day; it enables him to keep pace with the intelligence and progress of the times; it carries him on, imperceptibly to himself, with each progressive step of the era in which he lives; and it enables him, if he be a man of business, to open new channels of correspondence, and thus secure for himself new openings for trade, and new sources of profit.

Human Despondency.

The law of life, 'in the sweat of thy brow thou shalt eat bread.' No man can evade that law with impunity. Like all God's laws, it is its own executioner. It has strange penalties annexed to it—would you know them? Go to the park, or the esplanade, or the solitude after the night of dissipation, and read the penalties of being useless, in the sad, jaded, listless countenances—nay, in the very trifles which must be contrived to create excitement artificially. Yet these very eyes could, dull as they are, beam with intelligence; on many of those brows is stamped the mark of possible nobility. The fact is, that the capacity of ennui is one of the significant features of man's immortality. It is his greatness which makes inaction misery. If God had made us only to be insects, with no nobler care incumbent on us than the preservation of our lives, or the pursuit of happiness, we might be content to flutter from sweetness to sweetness, and from bud to flower. But if men with souls live only to eat and drink and be amused, is it any wonder if life be darkened with despondency?—F. W. Robertson.

The Morning Hour.

The air is tranquil and its temperature mild. It is morning, and a morning sweet, and fresh, and delightful. Everybody knows the morning in its metaphorical sense, applied to so many objects, and on so many occasions. The health, strength and beauty, of early years, lead us to call that period the "morning of life;" of a lovely young woman we say, she is "bright as the morning;" and no one doubts why Lucifer was called the "son of the morning." But the morning itself few people, inhabitants of cities, know anything about. Among all our good people, not one in a thousand sees the sun rise once a year. They know nothing of the morning.

Their idea of it is that's part of the day which comes along after a cup of coffee and a breakfast, or a piece of toast. With these morning is not a new issuing of light, a new bursting forth of the sun, a new waking up of all that has life, from a sort of temporary death to behold again the works of God, the heavens and the earth; it is only part of the domestic day, belonging to breakfast, to reading the newspaper, answering notes, sending the children to school, and giving orders for dinner. The first streak of light, the earliest purpling of the east, which the lark springs up to greet, and the deeper coloring into orange and red, till at length the "glorious sun is seen, regent of day," this they never enjoy, for they never see it. Beautiful descriptions of the morning abound in all languages, but they are the strongest perhaps in those of the East, where the sun is often an object of worship. King David speaks of taking to himself the "wings of the morning." This is highly poetical and beautiful. The wings of the morning are the beams of the rising sun. Rays of light are wings. It is thus said that the Sun of Righteousness shall arise "with healing in his wings;" a rising sun which shall scatter life, health and joy throughout the universe. Milton has fine descriptions of morning; but not so many as Shakespeare, from whose writings, pages of the most beautiful imagery, all founded on the glory of the morning, might be filled.

I never thought that Adam had much the advantage of us, from having seen the world

What I Love to See.

I love to see those honest souls
Who live by honest toil—
Though they may build the Iron Horse,
Or till their native soil—
Though they may guide those noble ships
That run o'er every sea,
For such are men whom we can trust
To guard our Liberty.

There's a life of 'Deeds—not words'—
While others talk, they do;
They are the friends I always love,
For such are brave and true:
Wealth and power can crush them not,
Where Freedom's flag shall wave—
Adversity, in any form,
Will teach them to be brave.

I love to see a modest girl,
Whose heart is kind and true,
Whose taste is governed more by sense
Than Fashion's vain ado—
And who can judge between true worth
And foppish flattery—
Whose mind's unstained by selfish pride—
She is the girl for me.

I love to see my country's flag
Wave o'er the brave and free,
It makes my soul grow big with thoughts
Of home and liberty.

I love to see true Freedom meet,
Pledged at their country's call,
While life shall last and they can fight,
Their stars shall never fall.

Those who possess the 'gift of gab'
Of course will often 'shout',
If in the right, I always love
To hear them 'spit it out'!

But still I love to see the old,
The young, the grave, the gay,
All know enough to hold their tongues
When they have naught to say.

I love to see the Iron Horse
Skim o'er the gleaming track,
For he like thoughts of other days,
May sometimes bear me back
To scenes of youth where I first learned How false the world could be—
To honor those who kept their word—
To prize consistency.

I love to see a man of grit—
A man of iron will,
Who says to all who seek to crush,
'I have a spirit still'—
Whose motto ever is, 'Do right',
Who never kneels to a shrine,
Who knows no foe that walks God's earth
Whom he will shrink to meet.

They who would climb the hill of fame
Must try themselves again—
A hero on life's battle field
Is always sure to win.
Then as a hero while you live,
And let your arm be high,
And whoso'er you undertake,
Accomplish it or die!

Country Life.

Happy the man who has the town escaped;
To him the whistling breeze, the murmuring brook,
The shining pebbles, peat,
Virtue's and wisdom's lore.

The whispering grove a holy temple is
To him, where God draws nigh to his soul;
Each verdant and a shrine,
Whereby he kneels to heaven.

The nightingale on him sings slumber down—
The nightingale awakes him, fluting sweet,
When shines the lovely red
Of morning through the trees.

Then he admires 'Thee in the plain, O God!
In the ascending path of dawning day,
Thee in thy glorious sun,
The worm—the budding branch—

Where coolness gushes, in the waving grass,
Or, o'er the dewy stream, the fountain, rests;
Inhales the breath of prime,
The gentle airs of eve.

His straw-decked thatched, where doves bustle in
The sun,
And play and hither to sweeter rest
Than golden halls of state
Or beds of down afford.

To him the plucky people, sporting chirp,
Chatter and whistle, on his basket perch,
And from his quiet hand
Pick crumbs, or peas, or grains.

Of wanders he alone, and thinks on death;
And in the village church-yard, by the graves,
Sits, and beholds the cross,
Death's waving garling there.

The stone beneath the elders, where a text
Of scripture teaches joyfully to die;
And with his sceptre stands Death,
An Angel, too, with palms.

Happy the man who thus hath 'escaped the town'
Him did an angel bless when he was born—
The cradle of the boy
With flowers celestial strewn.

Anecdotes.

A good Methodist minister at the West, who lived on a very small salary, was greatly troubled at one time to get his quarterly installment. He had called on his steward a number of times, but each time been put off with some excuse. His wants at length becoming urgent, he went to his steward and told him that he must have his money, as his family were suffering for the necessities of life.

Money! replied the steward. 'You preach for money? I thought you preached for good of souls!'

'Souls! replied the minister; 'I can't eat souls, and if I could, it won't take a thousand such as yours to make me feel most satisfied.'

A man was brought before a magistrate charged by an officer with being drunk.
The he stoutly denied, until the complainant testified that he found him on his hands and knees; and when asked what he was doing in that position, said he was playing elephant, and subsequently attempted to convert the lamp post into a trunk. In the face of this testimony he 'cove in.'

AYER'S

Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULIUS HAUER, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose choice products
are found at almost every toilet, says:

"I am happy to say of your CATARRHIC PILLS, that I have found them a better family medicine, for common use, than any other within my knowledge. Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and coincide with me in believing that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effective, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which must make them valued by the public,
when they are known."

The venerable Chancellor WARLAW writes from Baltimore, 15th April, 1854:

"Dr. J. C. AYER—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listless, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which has of late years overtaken
me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with unflinching success. You make medicines which cure; and I feel it a pleasure to commend
you for the good you have done and are doing."

"Pa. R. R. Office, Philadelphia, Dec. 13, 1853.
"Sir: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material
benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I

language is the grand separation between the educated and non-educated. All besides—at least, since books were invented and increased—is very much a matter of taste, perseverance, and apprenticeship, in one direction, produces a variously-cultivated man. The best academic classes are but vestibules to the library of published literature, in which vestibules students are detained that they may be instructed how to go further.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE.

THE HANCOCK LIGHT GUARDS, celebrated their First Anniversary, on Thursday last. The day was rather unpropitious for street parade, nevertheless, they turned out in their full strength and in fine order. The Company assembled at their Armory at an early hour, under the command of Lieut. Colonel Packard, who resumed the duties on this occasion for the last time, and marched through some of the principal streets, to the ground selected at the Point for Target firing. Here a collation was partaken, preparatory to exercising their skill in the main exercise of the firelock. The shots exchanged were good, and bore evidence that if a "border ruffian" or a Freesoil Abolitionist had occupied the place that they would have riddled him. They returned to their Armory in season to partake of a bounteous repast which was in waiting for them. The conviviality of the hour drew forth speeches from Maj. Webb, Hon. Wyman Abernethy, and others; and elicited numerous sentiments, from among which we select the following:

By JOSHUA BRIGMAN, Esq.—The Hancock Light Guards: May they ever be worthy the honored name they bear,—and ever ready to protect and defend the liberties of their country,—freedom of thought,—freedom of the press,—free speech, and free territory.

The Hancock Light Guards: May they ever stand firm and true to the principles of freedom and right, as did the patriot from whom they derive their name.

It was a bright ushering in, and happy consummation of the inauguration or birth-day of the Company. May they enjoy many such.

We would call attention to the advertisement of Dr. Murden, to be found in another column. Now is the season to enjoy such luxuries; and served up in the Dr.'s best style, are calculated to tempt the appetite of the most fastidious epicure.

Mrs. Joseph T. French has also opened a similar establishment on Washington street, where she will be happy to receive visitors.

For the Patriot.

Proposed Celebration of the 4th. of July.

MA. EDITOR:—The School Committee of the Town of Quincy, being desirous to promote some appropriate celebration of the approaching anniversary of our National Independence, respectfully invite their fellow-citizens, without distinction of sect or party, to co-operate with them in carrying into effect the following program.

It is proposed—that the pupils of the several Public Schools in this Town, with their Teachers, and as many of the parents and citizens generally as may be disposed, meet at some central place on the morning of the coming 4th. of July, at such hour as shall be notified hereafter, and move thence in procession to the church of the First Parish, where an Address may be expected from the Hon. Charles F. Adams, with other suitable exercises.

It is further the wish of the Committee, provided their fellow citizens will contribute the means to do so, that a tent be erected on some central spot where a simple collation may be provided for the children and where speeches from different gentlemen, and music may occupy agreeably the hour.

In order that they may be enabled to accomplish the entire plan thus submitted, the committee appeal confidently to the liberality of their fellow-citizens for the necessary funds.

They would also invite all who may feel interested in the occasion, to contribute flowers, meats, cakes, fruit, or other suitable refreshments for the tables.

The committee will use their best endeavors to render the proposed celebration of our Nation's birth-day as agreeable and satisfactory as possible to all classes among us. And they feel assured that they will be seconded by the inhabitants of a Town whose history is illustrated by such names as Adams, Hancock and Quincy, and which falls behind only a few towns in the Commonwealth, in the liberality with which it provides the means, through our Public Schools, for training up a succession of children who shall value and perpetuate the blessings achieved by such sires.

In behalf of the School Committee.
WM. P. LUNT, Chairman.

I say, Jim, if Mr. Brooke is not very careful, Gen. Wilson will stick a shoe knife into him.

Why, I thought Wilson had given up cutting out soles.

For the Patriot.
Humanity Answered.

MA. EDITOR: There appeared in the last number of your valuable paper an article entitled "Humanity," which I should judge emanated from the self-nominated Chairman of the Cemetery Committee, whom the town generously gave permission to retire from his arduous duties at the last annual March meeting; and believing that the production might deceive some of your readers, I have taken the liberty to reply and to give the motives which I believe actuated your correspondent in making his statement, after relating the accident. The article in question sets forth that the Chairman of the Selectmen very indignantly asked, "By what authority he was brought there?" But sir, if the arguments of this pseudo physician, were any less superficial in this department than in all others, he would probably know that had the Overseers of the Poor acted otherwise, they would have been guilty of neglect of duty, since by the laws and regulations of the Almshouse adopted by the town, "No person shall be admitted into the Almshouse without permission from one or more of the Board of Overseers." But the Superintendent asked why he was not carried to the public house? Certainly he did, and with reason; for as "many of the citizens can bear testimony to," the injured man lay in the depot nearly an hour, and was it not part of humanity to have him conveyed immediately to the nearest house?

And also, your correspondent states that the hospitalities of the town were refused. This I pronounce to be an unmilitated falsehood, and a libel upon the town authorities. The hospitalities were not refused and your correspondent knows it. I think, Mr. Editor, that there were other motives which prompted the author of this very humane article.

The individual to whom I refer, formerly received fifty dollars per annum for his services at the Almshouse, but the Overseers thought it was better for the interest of the town and humanity to have a good physician that would not cost more than twenty-five dollars than a poor one at fifty.

The man who makes personal imputations and indulges in the grossest personalities over anonymous signatures, is certainly a contemptible scribbler and one who should be marked and branded as a coward and a petty slanderer, unworthy of the patronage or society of respectable persons. If there is any to be despised, or detested, or avoided, by the community, it is he who attacks his neighbor in this most cowardly and unmanly way.

I have not words to express my contempt for an individual who maliciously pens what he knows to be false. It is the lowest species of blackguardism, unworthy of any one who wishes to be or thinks he is a man. And since your correspondent has resorted to these means to obtain his ends, and written as none but a mean man would write, I have endeavored to correct his statements and treat him as he should be treated, although I acknowledge it gives me infinite disgust to engage in such a dirty work as to reply to his productions.

W. W. BAXTER.

For the Patriot.

More about the Almshouse.

MA. EDITOR: Sir: The article in your last paper, under the head of "Humanity," states, that the Almshouse has been the place, where persons who have been dangerously injured have hitherto been carried, but now they are deprived of this privilege. In the By-Laws of the Town, the writer will find that no person can be admitted into the Almshouse, unless sent there by order of one or more of the Overseers of the Poor.

Now as the writer admits that the Selectmen or Overseers were they were not applied to by the physicians, instead of carrying the man there without authority? Why are the Superintendent and Chairman of the Selectmen to be censured for doing their duty and asking the reasons? The wife of the person injured was able to be with him at the Almshouse, where he remained in an unconscious state until Thursday, of last week, when he died: all this time he had the best of care and attention, which the family of the Superintendent and help employed by the town could bestow.

This is what the writer in his concluding paragraph calls being "Refused the hospitalities of the town"; this is the "barbarism" which he wishes the citizens of the town to notice. It must be unpleasant for our citizens to think that if they should be so unlucky as to get badly injured, and fall into the hands of these "humane physicians," they (like poor Murphy) will be immediately smuggled into the Almshouse, instead of being carried to their homes where they can have the care of friends. The writer alludes to the expense which will be made to the town. The town will have no expense to pay. The persons who carried the man there without authority are liable to pay all the expense of keeping him there, as much as they would be had they carried him to any other house, without permission.

We thought it our duty to take this notice of the article that the public might be set right on the subject.

For the Patriot.

Western Correspondence.

ST. LOUIS, JUNE 12TH, 1856.

FRIEND GREEN: Here I am among the "Border Ruffians" again. When I think how much excitement there is East on the Kansas question and Summer fight in the Senate, I cannot but contrast the feelings of the people here and what naturally leads me to suppose they are there. Here all is business, and you would not suppose that anything of the kind mentioned ever happened. All are apparently absorbed in business; comparatively speaking; there are but a few loafers in the West anywhere.

I see no black cloud yet that threatens destruction to the Union in the West. If there be such an one, I can assure you it has passed over, and if I should judge any thing by the atmosphere, the storm has gone past, and lingers only over Massachusetts.

The last great gun on the slave question has been fired. The Cincinnati Convention has decided it; all the excitement North, South, East and West, will soon die away. Every thing has been done in Congress and the Northeast to kill Douglass and Pierce. You may kill the men, but you cannot kill their principles; they will live, embalm in a nation's gratitude. The people endorse this last great nomination, James Buchanan for President, and that shows that there is strong personal feelings abroad. It was against the men not their principles. A spirit of enviousness, because of their boldness and sagacity and future prospects.

Yes, I say, the last battle on the slave question has been fought. Kansas was the natural boundary or the natural battle field, and all the late excitement on the part of Northern fanatics, was to make an issue that would defeat the great Democratic party. But Buchanan is nominated, and the booming cannons foretell the triumph of popular sovereignty and Democratic principles. The elegant, classical, and technical point, argumentative and scientific, is that, Sumner, for the insult offered to South Carolina, got his just deserts. If it is right for one who has language at command, under cover of the United States Senate, to insult the people of a state, and deal in personal vituperation, it is right also, that the aggrieved party should have the means of redress, and on the spot where the offence was given.

"Poor suffering Kansas!" A brave lot of men you have at the East. You deal more in words than actions. The scenes you have lately enacted at Kansas are replete with your cowardice and hypocrisy. When any danger threatens your leaders run and hide, fearful of meeting the responsibilities; while your vaunting clampions in Congress for the lack of true valor, deal in the lowest of billingsgate, trusting to the sacredness of the place for protection, leaving their poor deluded victims to breast the danger and receive the penalties consequent upon their misguided zeal.

This is not the first violation of their faith as impartial history bears record. Out upon such demagogical hypocrites; they have brought trouble and misery enough already upon this unfortunate people; and it is time that their true character was held up to the full blaze of noon-day.

What a glorious thing it is for the country that we have such a hardy, healthy class of foreigners among us; who on every occasion have been found true and loyal to the land of their adoption, and put to shame many of the natives of the soil.

I am going back to-day to lovely Winona, having spent three days here on business.

Good bye. Yours truly. J. W.

For the Patriot.

Scraps.

"The mountain has been in labor and brought forth a mouse." The Republican Convention at Philadelphia, on Wednesday last, selected John C. Fremont as their nominee for the Presidency to be supported in November next. He received over a two-third vote. There is trouble it is said brewing in the camp. His Hon. papa, Thomas H. Benton, don't appear to fancy the color of the beast. He says it is no more like the other woolly prodigy, than chalk is like cheese. He therefore repudiates it, and is soon to take the stump in Missouri, in favor of Mr. Buchanan. Straws show, &c.

The idea that a Southern man whose every feeling and impulse beats in harmony with the South, is to become the champion of Northern principles is an absurdity which none but the most fanatical would give utterance to.

Francis P. Blair, like a good Samaritan, has opened a hospital at Vinegar Hill, Maryland, for the laudable purpose of receiving the sick and maimed of the Republican party during the Presidential campaign. Frank's hospitality, when a penny can be turned, is proverbial. His disinterested patriotism should not go unrewarded.

A despatch was received by the President from Kansas, on Wednesday last, stating that Col. Sumner has a large force in the field, and was driving out the hostile invaders, and that quiet would soon be restored.

For the Patriot.
What Next?

The indignation which has been aroused by the assault on Mr. Sumner, is beginning to subside, and sober minded people are asking themselves where this will end? Is there to be a civil war?

If the meeting held in Quincy be taken as a fair sample of those held in other places, it is almost time to ask such questions, and if the speakers there are consistent, we will soon hear of a revolution, or of—a great back out. Being an outsider, some things seemed to me very strange in the composition of the meeting, and the language used there.

It seemed strange to hear the venerable Quincy, ascribing the troubles in Kansas, and assault on Mr. Sumner to the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson, and asking old Democrats to bear witness to the truth of Federal principles; and it seemed more strange to hear Democrats applaud such sentiments.

It seemed strange to hear the ministers of peace, advocating war, in language which seems not to be found in Scripture.

It seemed strange to hear an American citizen, in an American meeting, saying that he was ashamed of his native state, and it seemed stranger that instead of such a sentiment being met by a rebuke, it was received with rapturous applause.

It seemed strange to hear men who have no objection to bloodshed on a large scale, approve of the conduct of Henry Wilson, who declined the opportunity of washing out the offence against Massachusetts, in the blood of the principal offender.

It seemed strange to hear men who claim to be the most orderly and civilized community in the world, counsel armed resistance to the laws, if their opinions are not the opinions of the majority on a certain question.

It seemed strange to hear young men discarding that all the public men up to this time, were slavish tools to the South, and that all the wisdom and manhood of the nation are yet to be developed.

It seemed strange to hear a young man so truly eloquent as Henry Walker (whose language, and the manner of its delivery proves that he reads and thinks) on that side of the question.

These are a few of the thoughts I felt during the meeting, and if such sentiments are carried out it is time that every man having any interest in the country should calculate for himself, the value of the Union, and in sober seriousness to ask himself

The Two Sisters.

In a large city in Germany dwelt two sisters, Jeannette and Pauline. Jeannette had the good fortune to be very handsome, and the bad fortune to find it out too soon. She soon accustomed herself to look in the glass—that was natural; she soon took pains in dressing—that was pardonable; she endeavored to acquire accomplishments—that was prudent; but she thought nothing more was necessary—that was foolish. True, she played well on the harpichord, and sung bravura airs with taste; she drew landscapes after Haeckert, and embroidered flowers from nature. But she only played the harpichord in great companies, and only sung airs at concerts; she only drew landscapes for exhibition, and embroidered flowers for sofas and screens. At home, time passed tediously, although her old weak mother was continually praising her beauty. This old truth could only give pleasure by coming from new lips; hence Jeannette was continually seeking new society. Ladies always practice a certain economy in the praise of other ladies; but gentleness on the contrary, are very lavish of praise, and therefore Jeannette was fond of the society of gentlemen.

Her sister Pauline would probably have thought and acted in the same manner; but no one praised the poor girl, simply because no one noticed her, for the small part had rendered her appearance homely. She was also far behind her sister in showy accomplishments. She played the guitar and sung agreeably, but merely simple little songs. She was not behind Jeannette in the art of drawing; but except a few landscapes which hung in her mother's chamber, which no one but her mother saw, no one knew of her talent; for the homely Pauline was as diffident as the fascinating Jeannette was unembarrassed; and it only required a second look from any one to cause her to blush deeply. Fortunately this did not often happen, for no one looked at her twice. She embroidered as well as her sister, but only on work bags for aunts and grandmothers. She appeared best at home—in company the consciousness of her homeliness gave her an air of constraint; but at home affairs could not go on without her.

When the girls grew up, their mother thought proper that they should take charge of the house, each one by turns, week about. Pauline soon became accustomed to it, and in her week all things went on right. When Jeannette's turn came, she hurried about busily for the whole forenoon, but when noon came the dinner was spoiled. She grieved also at the time she lost from her singing and harpichord, and at the little time which was left her to arrange her head dress for her evening parties. The good hearted Pauline frequently took her task off her hands, until finally the practice was neglected of relieving each other weekly. Jeannette troubled herself no more about domestic affairs. The weak mother did not interfere, for she could not be displeased with the lovely face which pleased everybody. There could be no large party unless Jeannette Western graced it; her name suited the poets for a subject, and was the universal toast. Few only knew that she had a sister.

Two young officers, Edward and Maurice, saw Jeannette, and both became extremely enamored. Both were of good family, brave, noble, and both very rich. Jeannette was delighted with her conquests, and her mother who was in moderate circumstances indulged herself in sweet dreams of the future.

"If both should be in earnest," said she to her daughter, "which will you prefer?" "I don't know myself," answered Jeannette, "they both please me, but I shall like the richest one best. Then I should take care of you mother, in your old age, and I should have my sister to manage my house for me."

The doating parent wept for joy at the filial sentiments of her daughter, and Pauline was grateful for such a mark of sisterly affection.

In the meantime both of the young men wooed earnestly for the beauty's favor, and both were equally kind to the homely Pauline, because she gave them the pleasure of being alone with her sister. Jeannette was really in embarrassment which of her adorers to prefer. Edward gave a ball, at which she was queen, and she thought on that evening she was in a fair way to love Edward. Maurice gave a sleigh-ride, and she flew along the street in a splendid equipage, and on that day she thought Maurice more amiable than his rival. So she delayed her decision from one day to another, attributing her hesitation to her heart.

"If I were in your place," said Pauline one day, "I should take Edward."

"Why?—Maurice is as rich, and you will acknowledge he is the handsomer."

"He is generous too," said the mother.

"But he is fickle," replied Pauline. "Our aunt has told me a good many things about him."

"Our aunt," answered Jeannette snappishly, "is an old aunt."

Edward on the other hand, continued Pauline, "is more steady; and I think I have often remarked, that he feels more deeply and more sincerely than Maurice."

"Pshaw!" said Jeannette, tossing her head while she stuck a flower in her hair before the glass, "they both feel so deeply that I hardly know how to manage them. Meanwhile, what harm will there be in delaying my choice awhile? Their rivalry makes my time pass very pleasantly, and finally accident will decide." Pauline was silent. Both suitors continued their attention without remission.

One day as Edward entered the room, he found Pauline in tears and Jeannette laughing loudly. He asked modestly the cause of the tears and the laughter.

"I am a child," said Pauline, blushing, and left the chamber.

"A child indeed," said Jeannette, laughing after her; "you would never guess what she was crying for."

"If it is not improper to ask—"

"Oh not at all. You have probably sometimes remarked the old blind dog that used to lie on the sofa? He was mine, and in his young days used to make a good deal of sport. This morning he broke a handsome dish. At first I fretted a little; at last I thought the blind animal was good for nothing, and only did mischief; so sent him to a huntsman and had him shot."

"And that was the cause of your sister's weeping?"

"That was it. One would think we were living in the times of romance."

Edward was silent, and soon changed the conversation. But after that time he never overlooked Pauline as he had formerly done. He conversed sometimes with her, became acquainted with her unpretending worth, admired her modesty, and began to think her appearance less homely. Yet when the fascinating Jeannette appeared, her charms made him forget Pauline.

Jeannette had prepared a splendid masquerade dress for the character of a Sultan, for the carnival which was approaching, when her mother was taken sick. Pauline was to have accompanied her as her slave, and had prepared a becoming dress for the occasion. The day arrived; the illness of the mother had increased; the looks of the physician, although he said nothing, made Pauline determine not to go to the masquerade. Jeannette gave herself but little trouble to persuade her to go, and went without her.

"Where is your sister?" asked Edward.

"My mother is not well, and Pauline has remained at home for company."

He was pleased at that; but he had little time to think of it, for Jeannette appeared more beautiful than ever, and neither he nor Maurice left her side. She enjoyed the triumph of being admired in the highest degree. Whenever she danced, a crowd was formed around her; wherever she went, she heard the voice of flattery.

Towards midnight, just as she had promised to dance a quadrille with Edward, a domino came up and took off his mask; it was her mother's physician.

"Miss," said he, "I have just come from your house, and I dare not conceal from you that your mother is very ill."

"Good Heaven!" she exclaimed, terrified and perplexed, "I must go this moment."

"By all means," said Edward, let us go."

She obeyed mechanically, but said to a lady standing next to her, "I cannot dance any longer, my mother's sick."

"O, do not rob us of the ornament of our quadrille," said a young Englishman, "a few minutes can make no difference."

She looked at Edward as if she wished him to decide for her, but he was silent. It was now his turn to dance. The person next to him begged him—he cast an inquiring look at Jeannette; his neighbor reminded him again—Jeannette did not refuse, and so he danced the figure with her, and the quadrille was finished without anything more being said. She would then have gone, but she was so heated that she would have taken cold, by going into the air. After walking up and down the adjoining room for some time, she went home, and Edward accompanied her. As they went up the steps they saw fire in the kitchen, where Pauline was at the fire-place, preparing something for her mother. Her countenance, reddened by the glow of the fire, appeared handsome, this time, to Edward.

"It is well you have come," said Pauline to her sister, "mother has been very sick, and I have frequently had to leave her alone."

Edward felt himself in a singular frame of mind. On this very evening Jeannette had dropped some hints, which gave him hopes of gaining the victory over his rival. His delight on that account, however, had been much moderated since the last quadrille. A film fell from his eyes. He was able, for the first time, to look upon her beauty without a violent wish to possess her. He would probably have renounced her immediately, if vanity had not whispered that she would have immediately left the ball if she had not been dancing with him; and that it was he who had made her forget her duty for a moment. His feelings could not withstand the flattering thought of being beloved by so beautiful a girl, and all that reason could win of him was a determination to put her supposed affection for him to the proof.

He waited until her mother recovered, and then went one day with an air of trouble in his countenance to Jeannette, and informed her that his estate in Suabia had been ravaged by the enemy, and that it would take at least a year's rent to put it in its former condition. "But," added he tenderly, "if Jeannette only loves me, my income will be sufficient to protect us from want."

She was visibly shocked, and changed color as he began his relation, and her endeavors to conceal her confusion did not escape him. An anxious pause ensued. She soon, however, recovered her composure, laid her hand upon his in a friendly way, and said, "my good friend, I will not deceive you I am a spoiled child, and cannot do without a great many things. We are neither of us romancers. We know that the hottest love will grow cold in a cottage. That I am well inclined towards you, I will not deny; but we must act reasonably—remain my friend."

This declaration was a thrust in the heart of Edward; but it was a beneficial operation—the wound soon healed. He soon afterwards repeated the story in presence of Pauline. She did not look up from her embroidery, but he remarked that her eyes were moist.

"What gives the most pain from this misfortune," continued he, "is the poverty of my mother—my good mother. If I should devote the whole of my income to her, it will not be sufficient to provide her the luxuries to which she has been accustomed; and you know that poverty always depends upon the different wants of mankind."

Pauline raised her head and looked at him kindly. She said nothing, but her countenance spoke. The needle trembled in her hand. She bethought herself, and continued her embroidery.

After a pause she asked, as if merely to renew the conversation, "where does your mother reside?"

Edward answered at Stuttgart, where, in reality, she was in the highest circle of society. Pauline then spoke of the pleasant situation and advantages of Stuttgart, and nothing more was said of Edward's misfortune.

For the purpose of confirming what he had said of his losses, he limited his expenditures and sold his fine horses. He continued to visit the sisters, and the calmness of his feelings permitted him now to see a thousand little things that had formerly escaped him. None of his observations were of a kind to rekindle his former love; on the other hand, Pauline daily appeared more amiable to him, and her homeliness less striking. As he now conversed more with her than with Jeannette, she felt more confidence towards him, her bashfulness was conquered and she unfolded her heart. What conducted very much to this was the modest supposition, that Edward could have no thought of a marriage with her; that removed her embarrassment, and she showed her pure, unrestrained, sisterly affection.

Jeannette, on the other hand did not receive much pleasure from his visits, which were especially disagreeable when Maurice was present. To him she now confined her whole coquetry, and soon drew the net so thoroughly over him, that he besought her pressing every day, to make him the most enviable of mortals, at the altar. She still took airs upon herself and teased him for a while, and at last, jestingly, gave her consent. The lover was delighted excessively, and the most expensive preparations were commenced for the nuptials.

Meanwhile, Edward continued very calm. He was no longer in love, but it appeared to him at times as if he loved Pauline. His wish to see her, if he had not seen her for a day or two; the quickness with which the time passed in her company, the unwillingness with which he separated from her—all these things often made him think "what if I should offer Pauline my hand?" A surprising occurrence suddenly decided for him.

"He received a letter from his mother, containing a bill of exchange upon Stuttgart for one hundred dollars, signed by one of the principal bankers of the place in which he resided."

"I cannot comprehend," she wrote in her letter, "why it should have been sent to me. It was sent in an anonymous letter, in which I am besought, in a few lines, not to despise the gift of a good heart."

A flame blazed in Edward's breast. He trembled—his eyes sparkled. He hurried to the Banker.

"Did you draw this bill of exchange?"

"Yes."

"From whom?"

"I have been paid the value."

"By whom?"

"I cannot say."

"But the bill of exchange was sent to my mother."

"I know nothing of that—it is no business of mine."

"I beg you tell me the person."

"I cannot."

"You will probably cause the happiness of my life."

The banker looked at him with surprise.

"Will you tell the truth if I name the person?"

"Yes."

"Miss Pauline Western."

"You have guessed it."

Edward hurried out. In two minutes he lay at Pauline's feet and asked her hand. She was confused—she could not answer—he sighed. He put his arm around her—

"Am I disagreeable to you?"

She sunk upon his breast, and said, "Oh no, I have loved you; but how could I hope?"

The first raptures of love flowed through two noble hearts. Pauline could not comprehend how Edward had taken such a sudden violent resolution. She often asked the reason—he smiled but did not answer.

Her nuptials with the poor Edward were fixed for the same day, on which Jeannette was to marry the rich Maurice. Pauline made dispositions for strict frugality in her future domestic affairs; her white, plain bridal dress contrasted powerfully with the silver lace of her sister. Edward pressed her to his bosom and smiled.

"To-morrow," said he, "I will inform my mother of the choice I have made, you must also add a letter." Pauline promised it, but without some embarrassment, and Edward smiled again.

On the next day she handed the letter, but showed at the same time her finger done up, which had compelled her sister to write the letter. Edward kissed the finger, cast a look of love upon her, and a tear stood in his sparkling eye. She blushed and thought something was not right; but he said "very well," and smiled.

The marriage day appeared. Edward came early in the morning and laid a valuable necklace in his bride's lap. Pauline was astonished, but Jeannette was more so, for the necklace was more valuable than her own.

"I have been practising usury," said Edward jestingly, "a little sum advanced by a noble lady, a friend of mine, has doubled itself a thousand fold."

"By a noble lady?" said Pauline.

"The necklace is very fine," continued Edward, "but what adorns it the most, and will make me the happiest of men, is concealed in this paper."

She opened it confusedly. It was the wedding ring folded in the bill of exchange. Pauline recognized it at the first glance, and cast down her eyes blushing. Edward fell at her feet. She sunk down. "To deceive me so!" whispered she.

"When all was explained, Pauline's mother embraced her, while Jeannette tossed her pretty head. She endeavored to conceal her vexation; but the marriage day was the commencement of her matrimonial ill humor.

Several years; Edward found to his astonishment that he had been blind, that his wife was really handsome; and his domestic happiness increased every day. Domestic happiness never made it home with Jeannette. Pauline was surrounded by blooming children.

The sisters seldom saw each other; for Pauline lived only for her husband and children; Jeannette only for the great world. Here she found sufficient amends for the only true happiness of marriage, as long as her beauty daily attracted new admirers, and so long as her husband's riches afforded the means of expensive luxuries. But alas! her charms began to vanish—she grew sickly—the affection of her husband became deadened, his coffers were emptied, Madam ran in debt, Monsieur gambled away her jewels. They began with complaining and ended with reproaches. At length, one morning Maurice rode away, without taking leave, and was never heard of afterwards.

Poor and helpless Jeannette was forced to seek an asylum with her sister. She was kindly received, and treated with the most tender forbearance; but her conscience was not at ease, a violent cough enfeebled her frame, and in her twenty-eighth year no trace of her former beauty remained. Her mind was soured and embittered so that she was rendered unfit for any domestic joys. The servants of the family trembled before her. If the nurse wished to hush the infant, she had only to say, "Aunt is coming!" The larger children, when at play, if they heard her cough at a distance, slipped into some corner, and whispered to one another, "Aunt is coming."

Green Fruit.

The season of the year is approaching when green fruit of various kinds will be found in our vegetable markets, and by impudence in eating such, bowel complaints will become prevalent. There is a great propensity among children, as well as among adults to cram their stomachs with green fruit, which ought to be guarded against.

The most pernicious vegetable which we have in the early summer, are radishes and cucumbers. The latter are seldom eaten except as a vehicle for condiments, such as mustard, pepper and salt, and the only way to saturate them fully with these condiments—and then throw the indigestible mass out of the system.

Radishes are even worse if possible, than cucumbers, and as salt is the only seasoning used with them, there is not the poor apology which may be urged in behalf of the cucumber. They are uniformly oppressive to the stomach, and productive of great disturbance among the digestive organs. The only corrective to them is a glass of fourth proof brandy, but both they and the brandy had better be dispensed with.

The only way to relish vegetables which are digestible, is to eat them very soon after they are plucked. This cannot be done in reference to the early vegetables which we import from the South, for they lose that crispness which is essential to a healthy vegetable, before they reach our tables. It is wiser to defer partaking of the fruits of the season until they can be raised in our climate than to pay large prices for esculents which require to produce disarrangements of the digestive organs.

When green apples begin to come into the market, it is a peculiarly dangerous season for boys. They will always consume these half-ripened pomological specimens when they can get hold of them, and colic is almost sure to be the result. It is the same with regard to peaches and plums, though the latter, being later than the early apple and much more expensive, do not produce as much damage.

New potatoes ought to be avoided until they reach a respectable size. When they first arrive in the market they are so small and undeveloped that no amount of cooking can render them digestible. Connoisseurs always allow verdant potato to become the sole purchasers for at least four or five weeks after their first appearance, and await their ripening before they attempt to eat them.

Against greens, such as spinach and asparagus, which are boiled before being eaten, there is not a word to be said. The former are an excellent tonic and the latter a good diuretic. But celery, young onions, and lettuce are injurious to most constitutions and should never be eaten by the dyspeptic.

With the exception of ripe fruits, all vegetables which are consumed should be cooked. So should unripe fruit of every kind. The cooking relieves them of their noxious qualities and makes them digestible, which is otherwise extremely injurious to the stomach and assimilating organs. The tomato is the only exception to this rule. It should not be too ripe, and even when not fully ripe is palatable and easily digested. It is every year increasing in consumption and bids fair to become, to a great extent, a substitute for the potato. This is fortunate, as the potato is so liable to be affected by rot, for which,

as yet, there has been no remedy discovered.

A vegetable diet is doubtless cheaper than any other, but we disagree with those who think that people can get along as well without the aid of meat. We have however seen tables set with vegetables, fresh laid eggs and sweet butter, from which a very nourishing meal might be made and which, as an alternative from a meat repast, was certainly very welcome. But the vegetarians who live or who profess to live exclusively upon vegetables are not guilty of impudence in eating unripe fruits. Their experience has taught them to cook all unripe vegetables and to eat no ripe ones unless they are fresh. Those who use a mixed diet are not so careful as they should be as to the vegetables they consume, and they would do well to take a lesson from those who confine themselves chiefly to a vegetable diet.—Boston Herald.

Effect of Eating Horse Meat.

There is a Professor in Berlin who has been an eater of horse flesh for the last ten years. Two months ago he woke up his wife in the middle of the night by neighing loudly. The wife expressed her surprise, which made the professor laugh; but such a laugh, it was a decided horse laugh, that elicited a response from all the horses on a neighboring cabstand! In the afternoon his wife could hardly get him past a seed shop where a quantity of oats were spread out in the window for sale. Soon afterwards his hair (which was a rich auburn) began to grow to a tremendous length, and to assume more and more the shape of a mane. His face, too, was covered with hair, and he gave great amusement to the boys of Berlin by appearing one day in the streets with a pair of blinders.

Various other changes gradually came over him. He would start at a crack of a whip as if frightened; the scream of a railroad whistle would set him off galloping at full speed; while the sound of a trumpet would make him pick his ears and distend his nostrils in a most equine manner. It was noticed also that his ears of late had grown considerably longer. One night he was missed, and after considerable search he was found stretched at full length upon the straw in the stable. When his poor wife approached him, he began rearing and plunging in such a violent manner that it was only by putting on the kicking straps that he could be kept in the least still. Other curious symptoms soon declared themselves. He could not be induced to keep on his hoofs; and as it was found very uncomfortable to allow him to run about the drawing room bare-footed, he was removed, and permitted to indulge in his eccentricities only out of the house. He would spend whole afternoons in the different stable yards; his favorites were ostlers and omnibus conductors; his favorite haunts, the offices of the city-wagons and the most fashionable beer houses. Nothing pleased him so much as to sleep in a stall.

After a while his feet began to harden, not unlike a horse's hoof, was forming over them. The same peculiarity became soon observable on his hands. From this time forth he refused to walk upright, and one frosty morning he was found on all fours outside of a farmer's shop, stretching out one of his feet as if he was anxious to be shod. Since that period he has been put under the care of a veterinary surgeon who gives but faint hopes of his recovery.

"His face," he observes in a memoir written on the subject, "is growing longer every month. The nose has fallen to a straight line with the forehead; the nostrils have expanded to an inordinate size, and the mouth has stretched itself nearly three times its former width. There is but little doubt that in time all traces of the 'human face divine' will be walking about a pitiable object with a veritable horse's head on his shoulders! At present his only delight is having a bit put in his mouth."

Whether the transformation will proceed further it is impossible for us to say. One fact however, is pretty certain, for all the most learned philosophers of Berlin are unanimous on the point, that this singular absorption of the man in the animal is entirely owing to the practice persevered in for so many years of eating nothing but horse-flesh.—Punch.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, June 28th, 1856.

OUR WORTHY EDITOR, we are sorry to say, has been prostrated on a bed of sickness for the past ten days; he is at the present writing in that happy state of uncertainty, which the doctors pronounce convalescent. We have every reason to believe, however, that with prudence and good nursing, in a few days that he will be "himself again." We mention this fact, lest the Boston Journal should take exception at some of our editorials, or what may be worse, that a stray word of a "cheering" import should find its way into an unprejudiced paragraph, to the detriment of the public weal, and the future peace of our moral and religious community.

A NEW SUMMER RESORT for the dainties and luxuries of the season.

We made a transient call at the new refreshment establishment lately opened by Mrs. Joseph T. French, at her residence on Washington street, one day this week, with the thermometer rising of ninety, and must say that we were highly pleased with our visit. Her ice creams were delicious. They were soothing to our chafed spirits—and just the thing in these hot and piping times to cultivate ones' amiability, and put them in a humor with themselves and all the rest of the world.

Mrs. French, in this enterprise, we think, happily anticipated the wants of the community; a cool, retired retreat,—free from noise and dirt, and in the very centre of our village; with spacious and convenient reception rooms,—the choicest of delicacies, and a studious regard for the wants of her visitors, has rendered this retreat a desideratum long required by our people. It must succeed.

Mrs. F., it will also be recollected, is prepared to furnish families and parties with her cream, pastries etc., etc., at any time, and in any quantities.

THE FOURTH OF JULY. Friday next will usher in the eighty-second anniversary of our national independence. Yes, eighty-two years ago that Spartan band of patriots, who assembled in Independence Hall, at Philadelphia, gave utterance to those doctrines which struck with terror and dismay the kingly and priest-ridden monarchies of the old world—the right and ability of man for self-government. Let us follow up the doctrine by a hearty and cordial response to the principles contained in their immortal declaration, in a suitable observance of the day. This is our determination, and we therefore give NOTICE to our friends, especially our advertising ones, that in order to secure an early insertion of their favors they must be handed in on Thursday morning, as our office will be closed on the Fourth.

By reference to another column it will be seen that our citizens are making preparations to celebrate the approaching anniversary of our nation's birth day, in a manner that will allow all to become participants,—this is as it should be. Every means should be put in requisition to render suitable honors to the day. Let every one contribute of his means and we shall be able to make the occasion a happy and joyous one.

The Almshouse Affair.

MR. EDITOR: Humanity still lives, and the world moves on, notwithstanding the upheaving of the "Official" in the Patriot of the 21st instant.

But without joking, the coat seems to have been an exceedingly good fit, according to the recommendations it received from the honorable wearers. Would it not be well enough to have an extra edition of the gentleman's communication struck off, so that the citizens generally might have an opportunity to peruse this mighty document; whose language and assertions are so worthy the dignity of a Representative to the Legislature, Selectman and School Committee?—and one who "despises personalities."

I reiterate my former statements, and stand ready to defend them: "That the Selectmen were in the neighborhood, and were notified immediately of the accident, and the Chairman of the Board in a very indignant manner wished to know, 'by what authority' he was brought there?" and continued in this state of mind until the next day when they began to cool off and were more pliable.

There are some people in the world whom,

— "Authority intoxicates And makes mere sots of magistrates; The fumes of it invade the brain, And makes them giddy, proud and vain By this the fool commands the wise; The noble with the base complies." •

Fourth of July Celebration in Quincy.

MR. EDITOR:—The School Committee of the Town of Quincy, having made arrangements, which they hope will be satisfactory to their fellow-townsmen, for the celebration of the coming Fourth of July, respectfully present the following Program.

The Committee hereby request the Teachers and Pupils of all our Public Schools, the Clergymen of various denominations in the Town, the orator and others who are to take part in the Exercises of the occasion, the invited guests, the Selectmen of Quincy, the Hancock Light Guard, and fellow-citizens generally—to meet them at 10 o'clock on the morning of the Fourth, at the residence of the Subscriber on President's Hill, where a Procession will be formed under the direction of Maj. Thos. C. Webb, Chief Marshal, precisely at 10 1-2 o'clock A. M., to move to the First Congregational Church in the following order.

East Weymouth Band.
HANCOCK LIGHT GUARD.
Children of the several Schools preceded by their Teachers.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE.
Orator of the day with those who are to officiate on the occasion.
Selectmen of the Town.

Invited guests.
Citizens.

The Galleries of the Church will be opened at 10 o'clock to Ladies only.

The body of the Church below will be reserved for the Teachers and Scholars of the schools, and for the Committee with their guests.

The Exercises in the Church will proceed in the order given below:—

1. Voluntary on the organ.
2. Piece to be selected and sung by the Choir.
3. Prayer—by Rev. Mr. Clark.
4. Hymn—to be read by Rev. Mr. Rice, and to be sung by the children.
5. Reading of the Declaration of Independence by John Quincy Adams, Esq.
6. Singing—by Choir.
7. Address—by Hon. Charles F. Adams.
8. Singing—by the children, the words to be read by Rev. Mr. Paulson.
9. Benediction—by Rev. Mr. Bradlee.

Immediately upon the close of the Exercises in the Church, the Procession will be again formed in the same order as before, and march to the Tent, where refreshments will be provided, and where speaking from different individuals and music may be expected.

In behalf of the School Committee.
WM. P. LUNT, Chairman.

Webster's Residence.

HANOVER, JUNE 12th, 1856.

MY DEAR A:—Your patriotic soul would have rejoiced in an excursion which we made this morning. The day was all that the most fastidious or the most sensitive could wish. As one of our number expressed it, "Had the whole year been spread before us subject to our choice, we could not have made a happier selection."

We left Hanover in two vehicles about half past eight in the morning, and rode for an hour or more through a country mostly rolling,—sometimes quite pleasing to the eye, especially where the sign-board pointed up a deeply shaded lane "To Marshfield."

"Yes, we were on a pilgrimage to the home of America's greatest orator, and one of her wisest and best statesmen. Soon after coming in sight of the ocean, the house of Daniel Webster appeared in a valley on our left.

There is nothing peculiar about the exterior of the building, unless it be the numerous gables which lend it a picturesque effect. It was originally a plain country dwelling. The additions, which increased its comfort and beauty, were designed by its illustrious owner. The approach to the house winds prettily through rows of trees, until you are brought beneath the shade of what seemed to be an elm of remarkable beauty, whose branches on every side sweep the ground.

We obtained a ready admittance to the house, and passed from room to room, gazing upon the pictures, and furniture upon which that burning eye had so often rested. In the library we were shown a good likeness of the great man, taken before age and disease had set their mark upon him. Behind this portrait was a joint of a fishing-rod, and beside it a white felt hat, suggestive memento of their departed owner. Here also was to be seen the portrait of his son who died of a fever in Mexico. Passing on we entered the dining-room which commands a view of a quiet sheet of water, bordered by trees planted by the hand of Webster. We paused a moment in the chamber where the soul of the Patriot was breathed forth into the hands of the God who gave it. But solitude and silence are indispensable to the right appreciation of such a peace. I can form a better image of that scene now than when I stood in the very room where it was enacted.

Leaving the house, a walk through the garden conducted us to the foot of a wooded hill, vocal with the songs of birds. A capricious winding path led to a round summer house looking seaward. These well grown trees were all sown from seed by Webster's own hands.

As we wandered thus over house and grounds I could not help reflecting how the most cherished plans are overthrown. Here was a house to occupy and amuse a lifetime, and its lord could devote to it but a few weeks, snatched from the labors of his profession and the service of his country.

It was comforting to be reminded, though he might not live here always "in glorious ease," yet the image of such a charming abode would haunt that inward eye which confers immortality on the passing scenes of earth.

Now was the saddest part of our pilgrimage—to the resting place of all that remains of that noble form. About three-fourths of a mile from the residence in the old Winslow burial-ground, in which are the graves of the Webster family. His name alone marks the tomb of Daniel Webster. Near at hand is another gravestone bearing a condensed statement of his former doubts and subsequent faith in the Religion of the Cross.

I regret that my memory does not enable me to lay it before you, in its completeness, and it would be a great pity to mutilate it.

Yours, &c., a.

Western Correspondence.

CHICAGO, JUNE 8th, 1856.

FRIEND GREEN: Presuming that a few lines from this place, the adopted home of many Quincy people, will be interesting to many of your readers, I again write you a brief letter.

The business of Chicago during the present season bids fair to exceed that of any which has gone before it. Since the close of the last season, railroad communication has been extended beyond the Mississippi into Iowa. Trade has opened with a direct daily communication with the Mississippi River at the following points, Cairo, Alton, Burlington, Davenport, Dubuque and Galena. Not only in the South and West, have our railroads extended themselves:—Wisconsin has been brought into that line; Madison is now in direct communication with Chicago. Milwaukee has also sent the iron horse to Watertown and Harison. The Chicago, St. Paul and Fond-du-Lac road under the supervision of Col. Eastman has reached the borders of Wisconsin.

The winter and spring have been to all appearances good ones for the next harvest. Since the last spring thousands and thousands of acres have felt the plough; which only before bore the beautiful flowers of the Prairie. The population of this and the adjoining states have increased most rapidly, the larger portion of the new settlers coming from the Granite hills of New England. In Chicago, there is an unusual activity; business is in full blast. The river has long since rejected its icy coat, and is now covered with steam Tugs, blowing their vociferous whistles as they demand a clear passage up the river (through our city of bridges) with their immense trains of Canal boats and vessels.

The hotels are crowded. It is amusing to stand in the office of our first class hotels, and watch the countenances of the many strangers as they are successively told by the clerks, that "the house is full," "we have no room," "not a cot but what is occupied!" and a thousand similar answers; but Chicago is making generous provisions for her numerous guests. A new hotel, the Metropolitan, is almost completed; and another, the Richmond house, will shortly be. These with the extensive additions to the Briggs house, now in process of erection, will in a measure supply the wants of the travelling community; but there is still room for more.

The British residents of Chicago, celebrated the Queen's birthday (May 24th) by a supper at the Briggs house. The dining-hall was beautifully decorated with the American, English and French colors. The tables by the most elegant confectionery, representing the British Crown, Horn of Plenty, Helmet, &c. The dinner was magnificent (as all of French's are) embracing every luxury of the season, and the wines superior to anything ever served in Chicago. Praise enough for one hotel.

On Saturday evening last, about thirty of the personal friends of Messrs. Floyd and French, pleased with their success for the past year, assembled at the Briggs house and presented each of them with a gold watch both of which bore appropriate inscriptions; their cost was about two hundred dollars each. The presentation was made by A. F. Barnes, Esq., in behalf of the donors. Messrs. Floyd & French both replied in neat and pertinent speeches, after which the company sat down to a most sumptuous supper.

Among the many visitors to our city recently, are Gov. Reeder of Kansas, ex-Governor Baker, of (N. H.) R. K. Potter, Esq., of Boston, Major Adams of Roxbury and Francis Williams, Esq. of Quincy.

Amusements are all the rage here; within the last few weeks our pleasure seeking public have had the opportunity to visit the theatre, Parodi's concerts, two circuses, five bands of negro minstrels, and lectures, concerts and sparring exhibitions innumerable; not forgetting domestic monkeys and the five legged cow.

Since my last several Quincy boys have settled here or passed on farther west;—among them, D. F. Baxter, William N. Sheppard and John B. Bass.

So much for the present, when anything of interest turns up, you shall again hear from GREENE.

For the Patriot.

Indignation again.

MR. EDITOR: It was with surprise and mortification that I read in your paper the account of the indignation meeting in this place. I felt for the honor of the town, that the whole affair should be hushed up, and am sure that those who were participants, were anxious the next morning, to forget, and have the whole thing forgotten. It is truly surprising, that when the Federal leaders are so anxious to make the most of every event that occurs, the more considerable should be so entangled. It was, to be sure, highly important that the greatest excitement should be created, in order that the nomination at Philadelphia should not fall still-born on their hands; it was said that the State had been insulted in the person of their Senator!!! Not many years ago, the whole country was insulted in the person of their President; an advertisement appeared in the Boston Atlas, describing him as a run-away, last seen between Providence and Quincy, dressed in a nankeen jacket, etc. etc.; this was our illustrious townsman, J. Q. Adams; yet no indignation was talked of. A few years after, the nation was "shamefully, cowardly, and brutally" insulted in the person of its President, Andrew Jackson; a naval officer pulled the nose of this great Republic; and blood stained the floor on which its favorite President was standing; yet no indignation was talked of. People in those days, did not attempt to make political capital out of the actions of every blackguard; but now agitation is the trump card, king or knave, 'tis all the same. And what is the result of it all? John C. Fremont, a South Carolinian slaveholder has been nominated, in the vain hope of getting some Southern votes. We have had Northern men with Southern principles, in mercy spare us from Southern men and practices, with Northern professions. The South will no more vote for him because he owns slaves, than will the North for his woolly horse. South Carolina has many recreant sons besides Brooks, of whom she may well be ashamed; some of the meanest of these, may be ashamed of her, yet is she one of our glorious constellation—she means what she says, and she practices what she preaches; her sons when they reach the North, may talk against her, while receiving their daily bread from the sweat of her slaves, but she spurns them from her bosom.

How differently was brought about the nomination of Cincinnati, calmly and peaceably the people assembled in their respective places—quietly they elected their delegates, and that body after due deliberation, with a wisdom almost unprecedented, have nominated James C. Buchanan, the last of that noble body of tried statesmen, in which Webster, Calhoun and Clay were his comrades.

I trust that the coming celebration of Independence will not be desecrated with any more indignation. Let us have "union and Independence now and forever."

AMES.

FOURTH OF JULY. All that contemplate celebrating the glorious Fourth, will please notice the advertisement of Messrs. Sanderson & Lanergan, the well known Pyrotechnists to the city of Boston. They are prepared to furnish their superior Colored Fire Works in any design or in any quantity desired—they are the most extensive.

We understand that the Metropolitan Dramatic Company has just commenced a series of their select entertainments, at the Wales' Hall, Weymouth. We predict for their patrons a rich dramatic treat.

Valuable House Lots, Dwelling

House, Marsh Lands, Pews, Bank

Stock, &c., in Quincy.

PURSUANT to the will of Samuel Savil late of Quincy, will be sold by Public Auction, on MONDAY, June 30th, 1856, at 3 o'clock, P. M., on the premises first named, the following Real and Personal property belonging to the Estate of said deceased, to wit:

Seven Lots of land containing about half an acre each, directly opposite the Depot, in Quincy, lying between two streets, of 33 feet in width, running parallel to the Railroad, one of which was laid out by the late Mr. Savil, and the other by the Hon. John Quincy Adams. The lots are about 67 feet wide and about 300 feet from street to street. They are close to the residence of the Rev. Mr. Lunt and other valuable estates, and are quite desirable for improvement.

A two story double dwelling house arranged as two separate tenements of seven rooms each, with wood shed, good cellar, water and other conveniences, and about one-third of an acre of land, situated close to the depot in Quincy, and quite convenient for the accommodation of persons doing business in the line of the Railroad.

A tract of salt marsh containing about four acres, situated at Horse Neck, in Quincy.

Another tract of salt marsh containing two acres, situated at Rock Island in Quincy.

Also—6 shares in the Quincy Stone Bank; 3 do in the Quincy Bridge and Turnpike; 1 do in the Quincy Canal; and 2 pews in the Rev. Mr. Lunt's Meeting House in Quincy.—No. 91, in the body of the house, and No. 9 in the Gallery.

The whole of the above property will be sold without reserve or limit to settle and close the estate of the late Mr. Savil.

By order of JOHN SAVIL, Executor. Quincy, June 21. 1f

Poetry.

Now-a-Days.

Alas! how every thing has changed,
Since I was sweet sixteen,
When all the girls wore homespun frocks,
And aprons white and clean;
With bonnets made of braided straw,
That tied beneath the chin;
The shawls laid neatly on the neck,
And fastened with a pin.

I recollect the time when I
Rode father's horse to mill,
Across the meadows, rock and field,
And up and down the hill;
And when our folks were out at work,
As sure as I'm a sinner,
I jumped upon my horse bare-back,
And carried them their dinner.

Dear me! young ladies, now-a-days,
We must almost faint away,
To think of riding all alone,
In wagon, chaise, or sleigh;
And as for giving 'pa' his meals,
Or helping 'ma' to bake,
O, dear, 'twould spoil their lily hands,
'Though sometimes they make cake.

When winter came, the maiden's heart
Began to beat and flutter;
Each beau would take his sweetheart out,
Sleigh-riding in a cutter;
Or, if the storm was bleak and cold,
The girls and beaux together,
Would meet and have most glorious fun,
And never mind the weather.

But now, indeed, it grieves me much
This circumstance to mention.
However kind the young man's heart,
And honest his intention;
He never asks the girls to ride,
But such a war is waged,
And if he sees her once a week,
Why, surely, 'they're engaged.'

The Power of Words.

Oh never say a careless word
Hath not the power to pain;
The shaft may pierce some hidden wound,
That closes not again.
Weigh well those light-winged messengers;
God marked your heedless word;
And with it, too, the falling tear,
The heart-pang that it stirred.

Words!—What are Words? A simple Word
Hath spells to call the tears,
That long have lain a sealed fount,
Unclosed thro' mournful years.
Back from the unseen sepulchre,
A Word hath summoned forth
A form—that hath its place no more
Among the things of Earth.

Words—heed them well; some whispered one
Hath yet a power to fling
A shadow on the brow; and the Soul
In agony to wring;
A name—forgotten, or forgot,
That sometimes, unawares,
Murmurs upon our waking lips;
And mingles in our prayers.

Oh Words—sweet Words! A blessing comes Softly from kindly lips;
Tender endearing tones, that break
The Spirit's dear eclipse;
Oh! are there not some cherished tones
In the deep heart enshrined,
Uttered but once—'they pass'd'—and left
A track of light behind?

Words!—What are words? Ah! know'st thou not
The household names of love?
The thousand tender memories,
That float their graves above?
Long buried by the world's cold tread,
Yet mid the crowd they rise,
And smile, as Angel-guests would smile,
With gentle earnest eyes.

The Farmer's Life.

I love the farmer's quiet life—
His peaceful home devoid of strife,
With gay contentment blessed.
I love the virtues of his heart,
Which peace, and joy, and love impart,
Around his tranquil hearth.

I love the blooming hills and dales,
Their beautiful winds, their odorous gales,
Untainted with disease—
I love the tales and legends old,
By white haired sires at twilight told,
Of 'mid scenes of shadowy shade.

I love the labor and the toil,
Which clothe with beauty Freedom's soil,
Where tyrant never trod.
And where each task from turmoil free,
Great God, is sanctified by thee,
And consecrates the sod.

I love the scenes of social mirth,
Which brighten round his evening hearth,
With joy unmingled, replete;
Where Friendship's smile, and Love's shy leer
Are seen through Joy's transparent tear,
And true friends only meet.

I love whate'er the seasons bring—
The flowers that blush, the birds that sing,
Eve's low 'Zephyr breeze';
The vernal smiles, the Summer's charms,
The Autumn's fruits, and Winter's storms,
All charm in their degrees.

Anecdotes.

'Did I hurt you?' said a lady when she trod on a man's foot.
'No, madam, I thank you, seeing that it is you.' If it were anybody else I'd holler murder.

A farmer sent the following message to the 'lady of his love':
'Tell her,' he said, 'that gin she does na hwa me; I wanna kill myself, but I'll pine awa!'

A private standing sentry, when an officer, noticing that he had a black eye accosted him, and charged him with having been fighting.
'Please, sir,' the soldier replied, 'wasn't it for that you engaged me?'

Quincy, Dec. 3d.

Mc. Eckron's

CELEBRATED LINIMENT.

Triumphant

Equally Good for MAN or BEAST!

Has triumphed where all other external applications have failed to have any beneficial effect. It is justly acknowledged to be the greatest EXTERNAL REMEDY in the world, and its sale is unsurpassed in the annals of medicine. Unlike most other popular medicines of the day, it is used and recommended by many eminent members of the Medical Faculty; their praiseworthy having yielded to the many indisputable demonstrations of cures it has performed
where all other remedies have failed.

Hundreds of certificates might be given showing almost unbroken cures in cases of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Spinal Complaints, &c., and in Brains, Burns, Frost Wounds of all kinds, old Sores, Sprains, Broken Bones, dislo-cations, &c., &c.—but a FAIR TRIAL is all that is required to convince the most skeptical of its merits.

See Circulars.

Prepared by J. S. & J. E. SELDEN, Haddam, Conn., and sold by druggists throughout the U. S. and Canada.
